Part I.—Introductory.

SECT 1—The Nature of Courts.

SUB SECT 1—Definition

Meaning of
 "court."

1 The term "court" (a) has (inter alia) the original meaning of the King's Palace, and has acquired the meaning of the place where justice is administered, and thence again the meaning of the persons who exercise judicial functions under authority derived either immediately or mediately from the King. All tribunals, however, are not courts, in the sense in which the term is here employed, namely, to denote such tribunals as exercise jurisdiction over persons by reason of the sanction of the law, and not merely by reason of voluntary submission to such jurisdiction. Thus, arbitrators, committees of clubs, and the like, although they may be tribunals exercising judicial functions, are not "courts" in this sense of that term. On the other hand, a tribunal may be a court in the strict sense of the term although the chief part of its duties is not judicial. Parliament is a court. Its duties as a whole are deliberative and legislative, the judicial duties are only partial. A court of investigation, like the coroner's court, is a court. The distinction appears to be not so much whether the particular tribunal is a court of justice, but whether it is a court in law (b). Many bodies are not courts, although they have to decide questions, and in so doing have to act judicially, in the sense that the proceedings must be conducted with fairness and impartiality, such as assessment committees, boards of guardians, the benchers of the Inns of Court when considering the conduct of one of their members, or the General Medical Council when considering questions affecting the position of a medical man (c). A meeting of a county council for granting music and dancing licences is not a court (d), nor are justices at a licensing meeting sitting as a court of summary jurisdiction (e).

The Nature
of Courts.

As a general principle, all courts must be open to the public, though the judge may for good and sufficient reason order that the public, or a certain section of the public, shall be temporarily excluded (f).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Classification

2 Courts may be classified in several ways. First, they may be divided into such as are courts of the King and such as are not. The latter class includes the palatine courts (g), where the King has parted with the jura regalia in the county palatine, courts baron (h) and the old sheriffs' county courts (i), all other courts are the King's courts.

courts

3 Another manner of division is into courts of record and courts not of record. Whether a court is a court of record or not depends on whether it has power to fine (j) and imprison (k), whether for contempt of itself or for other substantive offences (l) Courts of record are such as have been expressly made so by statute (m), or by implication of a statute, that is by having statutory power to fine and imprison, and courts of record at common law These latter are such civil courts as have power to hear and determine, according to the course of the common law, actions in which the debt, damages or value of the property claimed is forty shillings or above, and such criminal courts as have power to fine or imprison Courts not of record are those civil courts in which the proceedings are not according to the course of common law (except such as have been made courts of record by statute) All courts of record, with the exception of the courts of the counties palatine, are courts of the King, even though a subject or corporation has the benefit of the court, as in the case of borough and city courts of record (n) The proceedings of a court of record preserved in its archives are called records, and are conclusive evidence of that which is recorded therein (o)

(m) The following courts have been made courts of record by statute The High Court of Justice, by the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 66), s 16, the Court of Appeal, ibid, s 18, the Court of Criminal Appeal, by the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 1 (7), the Court of Record for the Hundred of Salford, by the Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c cxxx), s 4, the County Courts, by the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 43), s 5

(n) Another distinction which has been drawn between courts of record and courts not of record is that in the former case a writ of error lay, and in the latter the proceeding was by way of writ of false judgment Proceedings in error have been expressly abolished, in the case of criminal proceedings by the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 20 (1), and in the case of civil proceedings in the High Court of Justice by R S O, 1875, Ord 58, r 1 (This rule is now repealed, but the abolition of proceedings in error remains in force) This rule was not expressly made to apply to inferior courts of record, but the effect of Le Blanch v Reuter's Telegraph Co (1876), 1 Ex D 408, C A, is that the procedure by error is superseded by an appeal to a divisional court of the King's Bench Division As, however, such appeals are limited to cases in which error would have lain, the distinction, if accurate, may still have practical importance It may be observed that although the writ of false judgment has never been abolished by statute, it has become obsolete, as has also the writ of recordari facias loquelam

The distinction, however, only appears to be accurate in the case of civil courts, for in the case of courts having criminal jurisdiction the criterion appears to be that courts having power to fine and imprison are courts of record, although the proceedings be not according to common law, and consequently the proceedings could not be challenged by writ of error, but only by certiorari, see Groenvelt v Burwell (1699), 1 Ld Raym 454 "Where there is a jurisdiction erected de novo with power to fine and imprison, it is a court of record for courts of record only can fine" (ibid, p 467) "He [HOLT, C J] compared it to convictions before justices of the peace out of sessions, upon which, though error does not lie, yet a certiorari lies" (ibid, p 469). In this case the court in question was that of the censors of the College of Physicians, who had, under the statute 1 Mar sess 2, c 9 (1553), power to fine and imprison; but see Miller v Seare (1776), 2 Wm Bl 1141, Payne v Wright (1892), 61 L J (M C) 114, C A

(o) "Record est in Escrip't en Parchment, ou sont enroll Pleas de Terre, ou Common Pleas, Faits, ou Criminal Proceedings en aucun Court de Record; mes en Courts nient de Record come Admiraltie, Courts Christian, Courts Baron &c. leur Registrie de Procedure ne sont proprement dits Records Mes Courts de Lay teign p Grant ál Roy sont Courts de P'rd" "Record is a Writing or Parchment, wherein are enrolled Pleas" or Common Pleas,

4 A third manner of division is into superior and inferior courts. The Superior Courts are the House of Lords, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the Supreme Court of Judicature, the Court of Criminal Appeal, and the Courts of Chancery of the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, and are all courts of record. All other courts are inferior courts, whether they are courts of record or not.

SECT. I.
The Nature
of Courts.

Superior and
courts.

5 The origin of the inferior courts, of which there are many varieties, may be traced back to the principle that justice should be taken to every man's door by constituting as many courts as there were manors in the Kingdom. They were primarily the court baron (p), which was incident to every manor, the hundred court (q), which was only a larger and more extended court baron, and the common law county courts, now practically extinct. To these were added numerous borough and other local courts (r), a variety of courts held by special officers for special purposes (s), and the modern county courts (t). They derived their general title of inferior courts because they were and are, in the great majority of cases, subject to the control and supervision of the Court of King's Bench or King's Bench Division as a superior court. A part of the original inherent jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench was to examine and correct all errors committed by the inferior courts, whether in matter of law or in exceeding the jurisdiction that had been conferred upon them (a).

courts.

6 The jurisdiction of an inferior court is defined by its constitution, which is either by charter from the King, Act of Parliament, or prescription, as amended or extended by any subsequent grant or legislation, or by order in council made under the provisions of the Judicature Acts, 1873 and 1884 (b). Such jurisdiction is generally limited to matters between residents in a certain locality, or to causes of action arising within prescribed metes and bounds, or to actions where the amount claimed is under a certain specified limit.

Jurisdiction
of inferior
courts.

7 It is in connection with jurisdiction that we find the chief distinctions between superior and inferior courts. The jurisdiction of the superior courts extends in civil cases over the whole of England and Wales and the town of Berwick-on-Tweed, and over the foreshore to low-water mark (c), though in certain circumstances the jurisdiction may be more extensive, and the courts may take cognisance of personal actions in respect of contracts or torts though the cause of action may have arisen abroad or the parties be foreigners(d) An agreement which purports to altogether oust the jurisdiction of the courts is void, though parties may agree to postpone the enforcement of a claim by action in the courts until their differences have been settled in some other way(e)

Jurisdiction

Prima facie, no matter is deemed to be beyond the jurisdiction of a superior court unless it is expressly shown to be so, while nothing is within the jurisdiction of an inferior court unless it is expressly shown on the face of the proceedings that the particular matter is within the cognisance of the particular court(f) An objection to the jurisdiction of one of the superior courts of general jurisdiction must show what other court has jurisdiction, so as to make it clear that the exercise by the superior court of its general jurisdiction is unnecessary(g) The King's Bench, for example, is a court of universal jurisdiction and superintendency in certain classes of actions, and cannot be deprived of its ascendancy by showing that some other court could have entertained the particular action In an inferior court, other than a county court, unless the proceedings show on their face that the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction, the action cannot be maintained(h), and even in inferior courts with a local limit of jurisdiction it must appear that such limit is not being exceeded(i)

Judgments

Another distinction is that while the judgment of a superior court unreversed is conclusive(j) as to all relevant matters thereby decided, the judgment of an inferior court involving a question of jurisdiction is not final(k), and another is that a plaintiff is liable to an action for executing the process of an inferior court in a matter beyond its jurisdiction, and cannot justify under such process, whether he knows of the defect or not, and that the judge and officers of such a court are liable to an action if they knew of the defect of jurisdiction(l)

The Nature
of Courts.

Remedy for excess of
jurisdiction.

8 If a court exceeds its jurisdiction the aggrieved party, or even a stranger, may apply to the King's Bench Division to exercise its ancient right of either prohibiting the judge of the inferior court from proceeding further in the matter, or, if judgment has been given, of bringing up the record by certiorari in order that it may be quashed (n)

9. At common law proceedings in error lay from any inferior court of record of civil jurisdiction to the King's Bench or Common Pleas, and now in all cases where the procedure by way of appeal from such a court is not regulated by some special statute an appeal can be brought to the King's Bench Division by notice of motion (o)

SECT 2—The Jurisdiction of Courts

SUB SECT 1—In General

10 By jurisdiction (p) is meant the authority which a court has to decide matters that are litigated before it or to take cognisance of matters presented in a formal way for its decision. The limits of this authority are imposed by the statute, charter, or commission under which the court is constituted (q), and may be extended or restricted by the like means. If no restriction or limit is imposed the jurisdiction is said to be unlimited, a limitation may be either as to the kind and nature of the actions and matters of which the particular court has cognisance (r), or as to the area over which the jurisdiction shall extend (s), or may partake of both these characteristics

jurisdiction

11 Where by reason of any such limitation a court is without jurisdiction to entertain any particular action or matter, neither the acquiescence nor the express consent of the parties can confer jurisdiction upon the court (t), nor can consent give a court jurisdiction

if a condition which goes to the jurisdiction has not been performed or fulfilled (a) But where the court has jurisdiction over the particular subject-matter of the action or the particular parties, and the only objection is whether, under the circumstances of the case, the court ought to exercise jurisdiction, the parties may agree to give jurisdiction in their particular case, or a defendant by appearing without protest or by taking any steps in the action may waive his right to object to the court taking cognisance of the proceedings (b) No appearance or answer, however, can give a jurisdiction to a limited court (c), nor can such a court give itself jurisdiction by finding facts (d) Where a limited court takes upon itself to exercise a jurisdiction it does not possess, its decision amounts to nothing (e), jurisdiction must be acquired before the judgment is given (f)

Prohibition

12 All lawful jurisdiction is derived from and must be traced to the royal authority (g) Any exercise of unauthorised jurisdiction is a usurpation of the royal prerogative, which is unwarranted by law and may be restrained by prohibition, which is, in short, a process for preventing inferior courts from intermeddling with or executing anything beyond their jurisdiction (g) In a prohibition for want of jurisdiction the only question is whether the court below has or has not jurisdiction, and immediately the superior court is satisfied that the inferior court has exceeded its jurisdiction, the writ must issue, whether the application be made by a party or by a stranger, and that no matter what stage the proceedings below have reached (h)

Original and appellate
jurisdiction

13 The jurisdiction of courts is either original or appellate, and in either case may be unlimited or limited as to the nature of the actions and matters of which the particular court has cognisance The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council appears to be the only court in England which has jurisdiction in every kind of action, as its appellate jurisdiction is not only co-extensive as regards the classes of actions with that of the House of Lords and that of the Supreme Court of Judicature, but also includes jurisdiction in criminal matters, and it is the ultimate Court of Appeal from all civil courts from which appeal does not lie to the Supreme Court of Judicature or to the House of Lords (i)

In the case of all other courts there is some limitation, be it greater or less, of the classes of actions or matters of which they have cognisance. This subject of the extent of the jurisdiction of particular courts is dealt with under each particular court (k). §NOT. 2.
The Jurisdiction
of Courts

14 When a court exceeds its jurisdiction by maintaining an action or matter of which it has not cognisance by law, the Supreme Court has power to issue a writ of prohibition to restrain such excessive exercise of jurisdiction. It appears that this jurisdiction extends to cases in which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council exceeds its jurisdiction (l). An excessive exercise of jurisdiction in the case of the High Court itself can be challenged by appeal to the Court of Appeal, and in the case of the Court of Appeal, by appeal to the House of Lords. The House of Lords, however, is the supreme tribunal, and as such is the judge of the extent of its own jurisdiction, and there is no means of questioning or challenging any exercise of jurisdiction on the part of that court. Remedy for
jurisdiction.

15 As regards proceedings in divorce and other matrimonial causes, the jurisdiction of the English courts depends, in the case of divorce, on the domicile of the parties (i.e., of the husband, as the wife's domicile is that of the husband) being in England at the time of the commencement of the suit (m). In suits for judicial separation the rule as to domicile is relaxed in favour of the wife, by allowing her to sue when the matrimonial residence is in England when proceedings are commenced (n). In nullity suits an English court has jurisdiction, whatever the domicile or matrimonial residence may be, provided that the marriage took place in this country (o). In suits for restitution of conjugal rights it would seem that residence by both parties at the time proceedings are commenced is sufficient to give jurisdiction to the English courts (p). Matrimonial causes

16 As to testamentary matters, the English courts have jurisdiction if the deceased was domiciled in England at the date of his death (q), but not, as a general rule, if the deceased Wills.

(l) Ex parte Smyth (1835), 3 Ad. & El. 719. In this case on an application to issue a writ of prohibition to the Judicial Committee, LITTLIDALE, J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: "Whether they are right in so decreeing or not is a question of practice, not of jurisdiction. The temporal courts cannot take notice of the practice of the ecclesiastical courts, or entertain a question whether, in any particular cause admitted to be of ecclesiastical cognisance, the practice has been regular. The only instances in which the temporal courts can interfere by way of prohibiting any particular proceeding in an ecclesiastical suit, are those in which something is done contrary to the general law of the land, or manifestly out of the jurisdiction of the court" (ibid., at p. 724). was not so domiciled, unless he leaves personal property within this country (a).

SUB-SECT. 3 —As to Area.

17 The authority of the King extends over all his subjects wherever they may be, and also over all foreigners who are within the realm. The jurisdiction of English courts of law, however, is limited, first, by the stipulations contained in the enactments by which the kingdoms of Scotland and Ireland were incorporated in the United Kingdom, secondly, by the charters of justice, letters patent, and statutes affecting particular colonies, and, thirdly, by the consideration that no English court will decide any question where it has not the power to enforce its decree.

The jurisdiction of each particular court is that which the King has delegated to it, and this delegation has been complete, for the King has distributed his whole power of judicature to divers courts of justice (b)

Real actions

18 As English courts have no power to enforce their decisions in questions as to the title to land or trespass to land outside the realm, they will not entertain actions to try such matters (c)

Offences
oversens.

19. Again, ordinary offences committed by subjects of the King in countries outside his dominions, or on the high seas on foreign ships, cannot be said to be against the King's peace or against his crown and dignity, and therefore by the common law, and apart from statutes, English courts have no jurisdiction in such cases (d)

We may try actions here which are in their nature transitory, though arising out of a transaction abroad, but not such as are in their nature local" (per BULLER, J, ibid, p 504), Phillips v Eyre (1870), L R 6 Q B 1, Ex Ch. "Our courts are said to be more open to admit actions founded upon foreign transactions than those of any other European country, but there are restrictions in respect of locality, which exclude some foreign causes of action altogether, namely those which would be local if they arose in England, such as trespass to land, and even with respect to those not falling within that * English courts, even though the cause of action arose abroad, and even an action in respect of an assault committed by a foreigner on a foreigner abroad may be tried by the courts of this country if process can be properly served (f) SECT. 2.

The Jurisdiction of Courts

21 By the common law there was no power to try offences committed by foreigners on board foreign ships below low-water mark, though within the territorial waters of His Majesty's dominions (g), but in 1878 such offences were brought within the jurisdiction (h). Offences in territorial waters

22 All English courts, however, have not the whole of this jurisdiction. Thus, the courts of the counties palatine, county courts, and borough and other local civil courts, have only had a jurisdiction limited in area conferred upon them, and the jurisdiction of such courts is strictly limited to the precinct defined by the statute or royal grant by which they are created or regulated (i). Limited jurisdiction.

23 In the case of such English courts as do not possess jurisdiction extending over the whole of England, but only jurisdiction limited to some particular precinct, there is by the common law no power to order the service of the writ of summons outside the area of jurisdiction (a), but this power has been conferred on many courts by statute or by statutory Rules and Orders (b). Service out of the jurisdiction

SECT. 3—Creation of Courts

24 Courts are created by the authority of the King as the fountain of justice (c). This authority is exercised either by description, our courts do not undertake universal jurisdiction " (per WILLIAMS, J., ibid., at p. 28). How courts are created.

(f) Down to Lord Mansfield's time it was doubted whether a tort committed abroad could be tried here, but in Mostyn v Fabrigas (1774) 1 SMILL, L. O., 11th ed., 591, it was decided that the jurisdiction of the English courts extends so far, see British South Africa Co v Companhia de Mocimboque, [1893] A. C. 602, at p. 614.

As to foreign sovereigns and governments, see titles ACTION, Vol. I, p. 18; CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI, p. 232, and as to diplomatic officers, see titles ACTION, Vol. I, p. 19, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI, p. 423. As to both, see also title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, p. 214, post.

In 1827 the Law Officers of the Crown advised that neither the Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708 (7 Ann. c. 12), nor any construction which could properly be placed upon it, extended so far as to protect the mere servants of ambassadors from arrest on criminal charges. Lord Dudley, who was then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, informed the Government of the United States that when a servant of a foreign minister was charged with a criminal offence the magistrate ordering the arrest would take the proper measures for apprising the minister, either by personal communication or through the Foreign Office, of the fact of a warrant having been issued before any attempt would be made to execute it, in order that the convenience of the minister might be consulted as to the time and manner of execution of the warrant.

An Act of Parliament is necessary to create a court which does not proceed according to the common law (i). The King, however, may grant a court with jurisdiction to hear and determine actions according to the common law, either limited or unlimited (k). The King may also grant the franchise of cognisance of pleas, by which the grantee obtains cognisance of all pleas within the limits of the grant, which are commenced in other courts than that of the grantee (l). The King may also grant an exempt jurisdiction, whereby the inhabitants of a city or borough may not be sued except within that city or borough (m).

The proposition that an Act of Parliament is necessary to create a court the procedure of which is not according to the common law is subject to the qualification that it does not apply to a Crown colony, properly so called, that is, a colony which has not received a grant of representative government. In the case of such a colony a bishopric may be constituted and ecclesiastical jurisdiction conferred by the sole authority of the Crown, yet letters patent granting such jurisdiction will not have any effect or operation in a colony possessed of an independent legislature (n).

the laws, whether of a temporal, ecclesiastical, or military nature, are called his laws, and it is his prerogative to take care of the due execution of them. Hence all judges must derive their authority from the Crown, by some commission warranted by law, and must exercise it in a lawful manner, and without any the least deviation from the known and stated forms" (ibid). ## Part II.—The High Court of Parliament.

SECT 1—The House of Lords.

SUB SECT 1—Constitution.

25 The House of Lords consists of (1) the peers of the realm—that is to say, of the peers of England, the peers of Great Britain, and the peers of the United Kingdom, sixteen representative peers of Scotland (elected for each Parliament), and twenty-eight representative peers of Ireland (elected for life), and (2) the lords spiritual—that is, the two Archbishops, the Bishops of London, Durham and Winchester, and the other English bishops except the eight junior bishops. The Bishop of Sodor and Man has a seat but no vote

SECT 1 The House of Lords

Constitution
of House of Lords.

SUB-SECT 2—Jurisdiction.

(1) Original Jurisdiction.

26 The jurisdiction of the House of Lords is original and appellate. The original jurisdiction arises in the following cases — Original jurisdiction.

(a) Trial of a Peer or Peeress for Treason, Felony, or Misprision

27 Where it is alleged that a temporal peer or peeress (o), whether of the United Kingdom or Ireland, has committed treason or a felony, or misprision of either, then, if Parliament be sitting, the House of Lords has jurisdiction to try the accused. In cases of misdemeanour a peer is triable by a jury as other persons are (p) felony, or misprision

A peer is appointed, on the address of the Lords, as Lord High Steward pro hac vice (q) to preside over the court, but he has not judicial functions beyond his fellow peers. The statutory provision as to summoning all peers (r) applies to trials in the House of Lords as well as to trials in the court of the Lord High Steward (s).

(b) Impeachment

28 The original jurisdiction of the House of Lords also arises on an impeachment of any subject, either peer or commoner, by the House of Commons (t). This is the most exalted form of criminal

(o) Bishops have not the privilege of trial by the House of Lords. See as to treason, titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol VI, p 345, CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, p 450, post

(q) See Journals of the House of Lords, Vol CXXXIII, 1901, July, 18. The Lord High Steward (Seneschallus Angliæ). This office is very ancient, and existed before the conquest "et sciendum est quod ejus officium est supervidere, et regulare sub rege, et immediate post regem totum regnum Angliæ, et omnia ministros legum infra idem regnum temporibus pacis et guerrarum" (4 Co Inst. 58). This is, however, not necessary for the constitution of the court (see Foet. 143). Sometimes no Lord High Steward is appointed, in such a case the Lord Chancellor presides in his capacity of Speaker of the House of Lords.

procedure, and has this peculiarity, that, while in other cases a pardon may be pleaded in bar, a pardon cannot be pleaded in bar of an impeachment by the House of Commons (u) The Crown may, however, pardon the offender after conviction If the accused is a peer, a Lord High Steward is appointed, for the occasion, to preside, while if a commoner is on his trial either the Lord Chancellor or the Speaker of the House of Commons presides

(c) Bills of Attainder

Attainder

29. The procedure against accused persons by Bill of Attainder (x) or Bill of Pains and Penalties is legislative in form, the Bill going through all the stages of other public and general Bills, but the accused is entitled to be defended by counsel and to call witnesses before both Houses. The concurrence of the Crown, testified by the royal assent to the Bill, is necessary in this manner of proceeding The Bill is usually introduced in the House of Lords, but in the case of Bishop Atterbury it was introduced in the House of Commons

(d) Irish Divorce Bills

Irish Divorce
Bills

30 Another form of original jurisdiction in the House of Lords is in the case of an Irish Divorce Bill (y) The courts in Ireland having only power to grant a divorce a mensa et thoro, an Act of Parliament is necessary to dissolve a marriage of persons having an Irish domicile Divorce Bills are always introduced in the House of Lords The standing orders require the Bill to contain a clause prohibiting the marriage of the respondent with any person with whom adultery is alleged This clause is always struck out in committee (z) A report of the previous proceedings is presented to the House The Speaker of either House may issue a warrant for the examination of witnesses in India (a) If this is done, the proceedings are not interrupted by a prorogation or dissolution of Parliament Divorce Bills are committed to a committee of the whole House Counsel are heard and witnesses examined on the second reading of the Bill

(e) Claims to Peerages and Offices of Honour

claims

31 The House of Lords also, by a committee of privileges, exercises jurisdiction over claims to peerages Its jurisdiction in in 1788, and of Lord Melville in 1800 As to the extent of the jurisdiction, see Lord Rochester's Report of Proceedings of Impeachments (Hatsell, Precedents of Parliament, Vol IV, Appendix No 10, p 397)

(y) Before the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c 85), marriages in England were not subject to dissolution by the Ecclesiastical Courts, which had jurisdiction in matrimonial causes, and the only manner of dissolving an English marriage was by Divorce Bill, in the same manner as is now necessary in the case of Irish marriages Since the passing of the Indian Divorce Act (Act No IV of 1869) a Bill is no longer necessary in order to dissolve an Indian marriage

this respect arises on reference from the Crown (b), and the decision of the committee is by way of resolution. The Crown, however, may act on the report of the Attorney-General without referring peerage claims to the House of Lords (c). Since the time of Charles II. claims to peerages, where there is any doubt, have been uniformly referred to the House of Lords, and the decision there has been acted on by the Crown (d).

In peerage cases there are two questions, one of law, that of the existence and nature of the dignity, the other of fact, that of the descent of the claimant. A decision on the first point, that of law, is apparently not conclusive as to persons other than the particular claimant and those claiming under him (e). A decision on the second, that of fact, is not conclusive, at all events against other claimants.

(f) Controverted Elections of Representative Peers of Scotland or Ireland

32. The House of Lords has jurisdiction to decide questions as to contested elections of the sixteen representatives of the peerage of Scotland (f) and of the twenty-eight representatives of the peerage of Ireland (g), and also questions of claims to vote at such elections. The procedure is as in peerage claims (h).

(g) Contempt or Breach of Privileges of the House

33 The House of Lords also exercises a jurisdiction over persons guilty of contempt, or breach of the privileges (i) of the House. In such a case the person complained of is ordered to attend the House. The House has power to impose a fine, as well as to imprison an offender. The imprisonment (k) may be for a fixed time, and may extend beyond the termination of the session. If the term of the imprisonment is not fixed, it remains in doubt

(b) Petitions were originally heard before the King in Parliament (Rot. Parl. v. 441, Rot. Parl. 3 Hen. 6, Fifth Report of the Committee on the Dignity of a Peer of the Realm, 198, 227). In 39 Eliz. Thomas, Lord de la Warr, petitioned the Queen as to his precedence in Parliament. The Queen referred the question to the House of Lords, and the House to a committee (De la Warr's (Lord) Case (1597), 11 Co. Rep. 1).

(c) The last time the Crown determined a peerage claim without reference to the House of Lords was in the case of the claim of Mr. Mildmay to the barony of Fitzwalter. This claim was originally referred to the House of Lords, but Parliament was prorogued before a decision was come to, the claim was then heard before the Privy Council, who decided in favour of the claimant 19th January, 1669-70. The writ of summons issued 10th February, 1669-70.

(i) Sir Erskine May divides breaches of privilege into four classes: (1) disobedience to general orders or rules of the House, (2) disobedience to particular orders, (3) indignities offered to the character or proceedings of Parliament, (4) assaults upon or insults to members, or reflections upon their character or conduct in Parliament, or interference with the officers of the House in discharge of their duty.

whether the prisoner can be discharged on habeas corpus after a prorogation (l)

(2) Appellate Jurisdiction

jurisdiction.

34 An appeal to the House of Lords lies (m) from any judgment or order of the Court of Appeal in England, or of any court in Scotland or Ireland from which error or appeal lay to the House of Lords by common law or statute (n). An appeal also lies from a decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal to the House of Lords, when the Attorney-General certifies that a decision of that court involves a point of law of exceptional public interest, and that it is desirable that a further appeal should be brought (o)

Sittings.

35 If Parliament is prorogued, the House of Lords may by order appoint days for the hearing of appeals, and if Parliament is dissolved, His Majesty may by writing under the sign manual authorise sittings for the hearing of appeals during the dissolution of Parliament (p).

SUB-SECT 2 —Judges

of court

36 In trials of peers before the House of Lords and on impeachments, all the members of the House (a) are equally judges of law and of fact, and though a High Steward may be appointed to preside, he has merely to regulate the procedure, and is a judge of law to no greater extent than any other peer. He has a vote in the same manner as other peers. The High Steward has the title of "His Grace" (b)

In the case of proceedings before the Committee of Privileges, the members of the committee are judges of law and of fact (c)

In the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords, no appeal can be heard (d) unless there be present three of

(n) That is to say, appeals to the House of Lords now lie from the Court of Session, the Commission of Teinds, and the Court of Exchequer (Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707 (6 Ann c 53), s 20), in Scotland, and the Supreme Court of Ireland

(a) The bishops have a right to be present at criminal trials by the House of Lords, but by the canon they are prohibited from voting in capital cases. They therefore ask leave to be absent from the judgment, and this being granted, they withdraw under protest, "saving to themselves and their successors all such rights in judicature as they have by law, and by right ought to have." For full form of this protest, see Lords' Journal, Vol CXXXIII, 18th July, 1901. By the Constitutions of Clarendon it was declared that bishops ought to take part in trials in the King's Court until it comes to a question of life or limb. In the case of Bills of Attainder, the procedure being legislative, bishops can take full part in the proceedings

The House
of Lords.

37 The Lords of Appeal in Ordinary are appointed by letters patent (g) The qualification is either to have held high judicial office for two years, or to have been for fifteen years a practising barrister in England or Ireland or a practising advocate in Scotland The tenure is during good behaviour (h). There are now four Lords of Appeal in Ordinary (i) Each receives a salary of £6,000 a year (k), and after service, including previous service in high judicial office, of fifteen years, may have a pension granted to him of £3,750 a year (l) A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary is entitled to sit and vote as a member of the House of Lords during his life (m)

38 The lay peers have, strictly speaking, the same right to vote on judicial questions as they have on other questions This right, however, has fallen into disuse, and since 1883 no lay peer has attempted to exercise it (n).

Lay peers.

39 The House of Lords has power in all cases to call on the judges to attend and assist them in their deliberations by giving their opinion on any points of law which may arise in any exercise of the judicial functions of the House This is frequently done in the case of peerage claims The House, however, need not agree with the advice of the judges The Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General may also be called upon to advise the House, and they, like the judges, are summoned as assistants at the opening of each Parliament Such of the Privy Council as are called by writ from the Crown to attend may also be called upon to advise the House (o).

- Black Rod The Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod executes warrants for the commitment of persons whose imprisonment is ordered by the House and assists at the introduction of peers and other ceremonies.
- Sergeant at-arms The Sergeant-at-arms attends the Lord Chancellor with the mace, he also executes orders of attachment on persons who are not in London or Westminster.

SECT 2.—The House of Commons.

SUB-SECT. 1—Jurisdiction

- Jurisdiction of House of Commons 41. The jurisdiction of the House of Commons appears to be confined to Bills of Attainder and of Pains and Penalties, Divorce Bills, and proceedings against persons for breach of privilege or for contempt. The proceedings before the committee on a private Bill in respect to the proving of the preamble are also an exercise of a quasi-judicial jurisdiction (a).
- Procedure. 42. In the case of Bills of Attainder and of Pains and Penalties witnesses are heard and the accused is entitled to be represented by counsel on the committee stage (b). In the case of Divorce Bills, after second reading the Bill is referred to the Select Committee (c) on Divorce Bills (d), which committee requires evidence to be given before them that an action for divorce has been brought before a competent court and judgment obtained therein (e). When the petitioner has attended the House of Lords on the second reading, the committee are to require him to attend before them to answer any questions they may think fit to put to him (f).

(p) On entering his office the Clerk of the Parliaments makes a declaration under the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), to make true entries and records of what is done in Parliament, and to keep such things secret and not to disclose them before they are published, except to such as they ought to be disclosed to. In proceedings against persons for breach of the privileges of the House, the procedure is similar to that in the House of Lords, but the House of Commons only punishes the offender by imprisonment, and not by fine (g), and the imprisonment is not for a fixed period, but is during the pleasure of the House. A prorogation has the effect of entitling the offender to be immediately discharged. If this is not done, a writ of habeas corpus will issue (h).

The House
of Commons.

SUB-SECT. 2—Officers

43 The officers of the House of Commons are the Under-Clerk of the Parliaments to attend upon the Commons, usually called the Clerk of the House, the Clerk Assistant, the Second Clerk Assistant, and the Sergeant-at arms

Officers of House of Commons

The Clerk of the House is appointed for life by the Crown by letters patent. His duties are to "make true entries, remembrances, and journals of all things done in the House" (i). He signs addresses, votes of thanks, and orders of the House, he has the custody of all records and documents, and is responsible for the conduct of business in the departments under his control, and he also assists the Speaker and advises members on questions of order and the proceedings of the House. On the election of a Speaker he puts the necessary questions, as he does on the adjournment of the House in the absence of the Speaker (k).

Clerk of the House

The Clerk Assistant and the Second Clerk Assistant are appointed by the Crown under the sign manual on the recommendation of the Speaker. Their duties are to take notes of all the proceedings and votes of the House, from which the Journal is prepared. They are removable only on the presentation to the Crown of an address by the House (l).

The resolution of the House that the plaintiff had been guilty of a breach of its privileges, and the order made for his commitment for that offence were in conformity to their power. In the case of a writ of habeas corpus being applied for the custom is now for the Sergeant-at-arms to make a return. The Sergeant-at-arms is appointed by the Crown under a warrant to the Lord Chamberlain of the Household and letters patent His duties are to arrest and to have the custody of persons ordered to be imprisoned for breach of privilege (m). He may be removed on an address from the House (n)

Part III.—Court of the Lord High Steward.

Trial of peers

44 If a peer has to be tried for treason or felony when Parliament is not sitting, the trial is had before the Court of the Lord High Steward of England (o) In such a case a commission is issued appointing some peer Lord High Steward and requiring such peers as he shall summon by his precept to be attendant on him In early days it became the custom to summon only a limited number of peers to the court, but in 1695 (p) it was enacted that all peers (q) having a right to sit and vote in Parliament must be summoned in the case of trials for treason or misprision of treason In the case of a trial for felony this Act does not apply (r) No case of a trial before this court has occurred since the Revolution (1689) (b)

No general appointment to the office of the Lord High Steward has been made since the office merged in the Crown on the accession of Henry IV on the 30th September, 1399 Appointments are, however, made pro hac vice on the occasion of a coronation or the trial of a peer (c)

Procedure

45. After indictment and the finding by a grand jury of a true bill (d), the procedure in the Court of the Lord High Steward is generally as in other criminal trials The Lord High Steward is sole judge of law and practice The verdict is by vote Each lord tries in turn, beginning with the junior baron, giving his decision

(m) The Sergeant-at-arms is justified in breaking open doors to effect an arrest (Burdett v Abbot (1811), 14 East, 1), but he may not remain in the house, if the person who is to be arrested is absent, to await his return (Howard v Gossett (1842), Car & M. 380)

Part IV.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

SECT. 1.—Constitution.

46 The jurisdiction of the Sovereign in Council arises out of the common law and the royal prerogative, but in most instances, so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, this jurisdiction has been transferred to the ordinary courts of law. An appeal, however, in certain cases from the United Kingdom, and in cases from courts having jurisdiction outside the United Kingdom, to the Sovereign in Council still exists.

Council

47 In 1833 the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was constituted (f). The committee consists of the President of the Council, the Lord Keeper or first Lord Commissioner of the Great Seal of England, and all privy councillors who have held these offices, or hold or have held high judicial office, that is to say who have been lords of appeal in ordinary, judges of the Supreme Courts of England or Ireland, or of the Court of Session in Scotland (g). The Sovereign may also by sign manual appoint two other privy councillors to be members of the committee (h). Privy councillors who are or have been judges of the Supreme Court of the Dominion of Canada, or of a superior court in any of the provinces of the Dominion, or of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, Victoria, Western Australia, the Cape of Good Hope or Natal, or of any other British possession fixed by Order in Council (i), or chief justice or justices of the High Court of Australia, or chief justice or judges of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, or judges of a superior court of the Transvaal or of the Orange River Colony (k), are also members of the Judicial Committee.

Committee.

(f) Judicial Committee Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41).

(g) There were formerly four paid judges of the Judicial Committee, but under the provisions of ss. 14 and 18 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 59), they have been replaced by two lords of appeal in ordinary (see p. 23, ante), and a judge of the Chancery Division, and a judge of the King's Bench Division.

SECT 1.
Constitu- tion

Any member of the Privy Council, being or having been chief justice or a judge of any High Court in British India (l), can by direction of His Majesty be made a member of the Judicial Committee, but there must not be more than two such members at the same time (m)

In 1876 an Order in Council was made regulating the attendance of the archbishops and bishops as assessors on the hearing of ecclesiastical cases (n)

His Majesty has also power to authorise any person who is or has been a judge of the court appealed from, or of any court to which an appeal lies from that court, to act as assessor on the hearing of the appeal. This provision applies only to British India, the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Transvaal, Orange River Colony and Newfoundland, and any other colony which may be added by Order in Council (o)

A member of the Judicial Committee may resign his office by giving notice in writing to the Lord President of the Council (p).

SECT 2 —Jurisdiction

SUB-SECT 1 —How the Jurisdiction Arises

jurisdiction

48 The jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to hear appeals to His Majesty in Council arises from an Order in Council directing that all appeals or petitions, including complaints in the nature of appeals and petitions in the matter of appeals, shall be referred to the Judicial Committee. Such an Order in Council may be made from time to time and remains in force until the order is rescinded. In the absence of such a general Order in Council a special order of reference is necessary in the case of each appeal (q)

SUB-SECT 2 —Appeals in Admiralty Matters.

Admiralty
matters

49 Appeals lie to the Judicial Committee from the Admiralty Court of the Cinque Ports (r), colonial Courts of Admiralty (s), and Vice-Admiralty Courts (t).

The appeal from all Admiralty Courts, including the High Court of Justice in prize cases, is to the Judicial Committee (u)

Ecclesiastical matters.

50. In the reign of Henry VIII. (b) an appeal from ecclesiastical courts was given to the King in Chancery, to be heard by commissioners appointed under the Great Seal. This court, known as the High Court of Delegates, was abolished in 1832 by an Act which transferred the jurisdiction to the King in Council (c). This jurisdiction is now exercisable by the Judicial Committee (d).

The courts from which these appeals lie are the various provincial courts of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York (e), the diocesan courts of the bishops (f), the courts of commissaries, the archidiaconal courts, and the courts of peculiars (g). Besides these there are appeals from the court under the Benefices Act, 1898 (h), the court under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (i), the court under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (k), and from the court under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (l). If, however, the appellant under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (a), elect to appeal to the court of the archbishop of the province, there is no further appeal to the Judicial Committee.

 appeals.

52 As His Majesty the King is supreme over all persons and courts within his dominions, a right of appeal in all cases civil and criminal to the King in Council exists from the highest civil court of each separate colony, province, state, or possession, whether it be a court of error or not, except so far as the prerogative in this behalf has been surrendered. Criminal proceedings, however, will only be reviewed if it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done (c). This right has been defined and regulated in the case of British colonies and possessions by statutes (d), charters of justice, letters patent, and Orders in Council (e). In some cases

special leave

53 Besides those cases in which appeals lie by right of a grant contained in the instrument constituting the court, a person aggrieved by a decision of a court may present a petition, supported by affidavit, praying for leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee on special grounds (h). Such leave will not be granted in cases where it can be shown that the prerogative power to grant leave to appeal has been surrendered (i). If the Court below has power to grant leave to appeal an application for leave should be made to that court in the first instance (k).

The appeals from these courts are governed by the Orders in Council establishing or otherwise regulating them (m). These appeals are in some cases direct to the King in Council (n), and in others to some colonial court and thence to the King in Council (o).

Endowed schools.

55 The governing body of any endowment to which a scheme under the Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (p), relates, or any person or corporation aggrieved by the scheme, may, in certain cases, within two months after publication of the scheme when approved, petition His Majesty in Council against the scheme (q). Such petitions are to be referred to the Judicial Committee as if they were appeals from courts from which an appeal lies to the Judicial Committee (r).

SECT. 3—*Practice and Procedure*SUB-SECT 1—Ordinary Appeals

56 The practice and procedure of the Judicial Committee in ordinary appeals is, as from 1st January, 1909 (s), regulated by Orders in Council made in that behalf on 6th March, 1896 (a), and 21st December, 1908 (b)

Regulation of practice.

(1) Leave to Appeal

57 Appeals lie either by the right of grant, in pursuance of leave obtained by the appellant from the court appealed from, or by reason of special leave granted by the Judicial Committee (c). The latter appeals arise either where leave to appeal has been refused by the court below, or where the leave to appeal was granted on some special point, and the appellant wishes to raise points not included in the leave to appeal or not decided at some stage in the action previous to the decision of the court appealed from, or where the court below does not possess power to grant leave to appeal. Special leave may also be obtained to avoid having recourse to an intermediate court of appeal, where a question of law is raised by the proceedings (d).

Leave to appeal

A refusal to allow an appeal to the Judicial Committee arises in most cases by reason of the court below holding that the amount in dispute is below the appealable value, in such a case, in the petition against that holding, it is advisable to ask for special leave to appeal, as the Judicial Committee, if they affirm the decision of the court below as to the amount in dispute, may still, upon its 58 The petition asking for special leave to appeal must state succinctly and fairly all such facts as it may be necessary to state in order to enable the Judicial Committee to advise His Majesty whether such leave ought to be granted. The petition must not travel into extraneous matter, and must deal with the merits of the case only so far as is necessary for the purpose of explaining and supporting the particular grounds upon which special leave to appeal is sought (g). It is necessary that there should be uberima fides on the part of the petitioner (h).

The petitioner must lodge at least three copies of his petition for special leave to appeal together with an affidavit that, to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief, the allegations contained in the petition are true (i). The petition for special leave to appeal may be lodged at any time after the date of the judgment sought to be appealed against, but with the least possible delay (k). Where the Judicial Committee advise His Majesty to grant special leave to appeal, they must in their report specify the amount of security for costs (if any) to be lodged by the petitioner, and the period (if any) within which such security is to be lodged and, unless the circumstances of a particular case render such a course unnecessary, provide for the transmission of the record by the registrar of the court appealed from to the registrar of the Privy Council, and provide further matters as the justice of the case may require (l).

An appellant in formâ pauperis may be awarded costs according to the rules of the House of Lords as to pauper costs (q)

(u) Preparation of Record

60 After an appellant has fulfilled the conditions governing an appeal so far as the court below is affected, or has obtained special leave to appeal, the appellant is required without delay to take all necessary steps to have the record transmitted to the registrar of the Privy Council (r). The record must be printed in accordance with prescribed rules (s), and may be printed either abroad or in England (t). Where the record is printed abroad, the registrar of the court below must, at the expense of the appellant, transmit to the registrar of the Privy Council forty copies of such record, one of which copies he must certify to be correct by signing his name on, or initialling every eighth page thereof, and by affixing thereto the seal of any of the courts appealed from (a). The record.

Where the record is printed in England, the registrar must, at the expense of the appellant, transmit to the registrar of the Privy Council one certified copy of such record, together with an index of all the papers and exhibits in the case. No other certified copies of the record may be transmitted to the agents in England by or on behalf of the parties to the appeal (b).

Where part of the record is printed abroad the above rules apply, as far as practicable, to such parts as are printed abroad and in England respectively (c).

The reasons given by the judge, or any of the judges, for or against any judgment pronounced in the course of the proceedings out of which the appeal arises, are to be communicated by such judge or judges in writing to the registrar, and are to be transmitted to the registrar of the Privy Council at the same time as the record is transmitted (d).

SECT 8.
Practice and
Procedure
Documents

The registrar, as well as the parties and their agents, must endeavour to exclude from the record all documents (especially such as are merely formal) that are not relevant to the subject-matter of the appeal, and, generally, to reduce the bulk of the record as far as practicable, taking special care to avoid the duplication of documents and the unnecessary repetition of headings and other merely formal parts of documents, but the documents omitted to be printed or copied must be enumerated in a list to be placed after the index or at the end of the record (e)

Where one party objects to the inclusion of a document in the record, on the ground that it is unnecessary or irrelevant, and the other party insists on its being included, the record as finally printed must, with a view to the subsequent adjustment of the costs of and incidental to such document, indicate, in the index or otherwise, the fact that, and the party by whom, the inclusion of the document was objected to (f)

Registration
of record

The record must be registered in the registry of the Privy Council as soon as it is received, with the date of arrival, the names of the parties, the date of the judgment appealed from, and the description, whether "printed" or "written". A record not printed in the prescribed manner (g) is to be treated as written. Appeals are to be numbered consecutively in each year in the order in which they are received (h)

The parties are entitled to inspect the record and to extract all necessary particulars therefrom for the purpose of entering an appearance (i)

Appearance

61 When the record arrives in England either wholly or partly written, the appellant must within four months, if the appeal comes from certain courts (k), and within two months in other cases, enter an appearance and bespeak a typewritten copy of the record, or of such parts thereof as it may be necessary to have copied (l)

After entering his appearance the appellant must forthwith give notice thereof to the respondent, if the latter has entered an appearance (m)

Special case

62 When it appears likely that the decision of a matter on appeal will turn exclusively on a question of law, the parties, with the sanction of the registrar of the Privy Council, may submit such question of law to the Judicial Committee in the form of a special

In order to promote such arrangements and simplification of matters in dispute, the registrar may call the parties before him, and, having heard them and examined the record, may report to the Judicial Committee as to the nature of the proceedings (n). ENGL. &
Procedure.

63 As soon as the appellant has obtained the typewritten copy of the record, he must arrange the documents in order, check the index, insert marginal notes, and generally do all that is necessary to prepare the copy for the printer, and, if the respondent has entered an appearance, submit the copy prepared for the printer to the respondent for approval. If the parties cannot agree the matter is to be submitted to the registrar of the Privy Council, whose decision thereon shall be final (o). Printing records.

When the typewritten copy of the record is ready for the printer, the appellant must lodge it with a request to the registrar to have it printed by His Majesty's Printer or by any other printer on the same terms, and engage to pay the prescribed price (p) for fifty copies, or such other number as in the opinion of the registrar the circumstances of the case require (q).

64 When the proof prints of the record are ready, the registrar of the Privy Council must give notice to all parties who have entered an appearance, requesting them to attend at the registry, at a time named, to examine the proof prints and compare them with the certified record. After the examination the appellant must lodge his proof print, duly corrected and so far as necessary approved by the respondent, and the registrar must cause the copies of the record to be struck off from this proof print (r). Proof print

Each party who has entered an appearance is entitled to receive for his own use six copies of the record (s).

Subject to any special direction from the Judicial Committee, the costs of and incidental to the printing of the record form part of the costs of the appeal, but where a document has been objected to by either party (t) if such document on taxation is found to be unnecessary or irrelevant, the costs of printing it are disallowed to or borne by the party insisting on its inclusion (a). The petition of appeal (d) must recite succinctly, and, as far as possible, in chronological order, the principal steps in the proceedings from their commencement down to the admission of the appeal, but must not contain argumentative matter, or go into the merits of the case (e).

The appellant must, after lodging his petition of appeal, serve a copy thereof indorsed with the date of lodgment without delay on the respondent, as soon as the latter has entered an appearance (f)

Setting down     66. The petitioner must notify the registrar when a petition is ready for hearing, and the petition is thereupon deemed to be set down (g)

All petitions which have been set down are to be put in the paper, unless the Judicial Committee otherwise direct, on each day appointed for the hearing of petitions. Petitions, however, in the absence of special circumstances of urgency shown to the satisfaction of the registrar, are not to be put in the paper before the expiration of three clear days, if unopposed, or ten clear days, if opposed, from the lodging thereof, unless in the latter case the opponent consents to an earlier day not less than three clear days from the lodging (h).

Withdrawal.

68 A petitioner who desires to withdraw his petition must give notice in writing to the registrar. Where the petition is opposed the opponent is, subject to any agreement between the parties, entitled to apply to the Judicial Committee for his costs, but where the petition is unopposed, or the parties have agreed as to the costs, the committee may dispose of the petition as a consent petition (l). An appeal once accepted can only be withdrawn by leave of the Judicial Committee obtained on petition (m)

The caveator shall forthwith, after lodging his caveat, give notice thereof to the petitioner, if the petition has been lodged (p)

71 Copies of petitions relating to any appeals of which the record has been registered in the registry of the Privy Council are to be served on all parties who have entered an appearance. 72 A petition not relating to any appeal of which the record has been registered in the registry of the Privy Council, or which contains allegations of fact which cannot be verified by reference to the registered record, or any certificate, or duly authenticated statement of the court below, must be supported by an affidavit. Where the petitioner appears in person, this affidavit must be sworn by him, and state that to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief the allegations in the petition are true. Where the petitioner is represented by an agent, the affidavit must be sworn by the agent, and, besides stating that to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief the allegations in the petition are true, show how he obtained his instructions and information (r).

The appeal stands dismissed as from the date of this letter (b).

When an appellant, who has lodged his petition of appeal, desires to withdraw his appeal, he must present a petition to that effect. On the hearing of this petition a respondent who has entered an appearance may (in the absence of any agreement between the parties) apply to the Judicial Committee for his costs. But when the respondent has not entered an appearance, or if he has entered an appearance but consents in writing to the prayer of the petition, the Judicial Committee may, if they think fit, dispose of it similarly to a consent petition, mutatis mutandis (c).

The appeal stands dismissed for non-prosecution as from the date of this letter without further order (e).

Where there are two or more respondents, and only one or more enter an appearance, the appearance form must set out the names of those who appear (n).

Two or more respondents may at their own risk as to costs enter separate appearances in the same appeal (o).

A respondent who has not entered an appearance is not entitled to receive any notice relating to the appeal from the registrar of the Privy Council, nor be allowed to lodge a case (p).

79 Subject to any special order of the Judicial Committee to the contrary, if a respondent, who was a respondent when the appeal was admitted, whether by order of the court below or by an Order in Council giving special leave to appeal, fails to enter an appearance, and it appears from the terms of the said order or Order in Council, or from the record, or from a certificate of the registrar of the court below, that the said non-appearing respondent has received notice, or is otherwise aware of the said order or Order in Council, and has also received notice or is otherwise aware of the despatch of the record to England, the appeal may be set down ex parte

If the non-appearing respondent was made a respondent by Order in Council subsequently to the admission of the appeal, and it appears from the record, or supplementary record, or from a certificate of the registrar of the court below, that the non-appearing respondent has received notice or was otherwise aware of any intended application to bring him on the record as a respondent, the appeal may be set down ex parte as against him, at any time after the expiration of three months after service on him of the Order in Council bringing him on the record as a respondent (r)

If it is shown to the satisfaction of the Judicial Committee, by affidavit or otherwise, that the appellant has made every reasonable endeavour to serve a non-appearing respondent with the prescribed notices (s), and has failed to effect service, or that it is not the intention of the respondent to enter an appearance, the appeal may, without further order and at the risk of the appellant, be set down ex parte as against the non-appearing respondent (t)

Practice and Procedure.Case to be lodged

82. No party to an appeal is entitled to be heard by the Judicial Committee unless he has previously lodged his case. A respondent, however, who is merely a stakeholder or trustee with no other interest in the appeal, may give notice in writing to the registrar of his intention not to lodge a case, reserving his right to address the committee on the question of costs (e).

The case may be printed either in England or abroad, but in either case must be printed in the prescribed manner (f), and shall be signed by at least one of the counsel who attends the hearing of the appeal, or by the party if he appears in person (g). Each party must lodge forty copies of his case (h).

83 The case must consist of paragraphs numbered consecutively, and state as concisely as possible the circumstances out of which the appeal arises, the contentions to be urged by the party lodging the case, and the reasons of appeal. References by page and line to the relevant portions of the record are to be, as far as practicable, printed in the margin, long extracts from the record must, as far as practicable, not be printed in the case. The taxing officer must, in taxing the costs, either of his own motion or at the instance of the opposite party inquire into any unnecessary prolixity in the case, and disallow the costs occasioned thereby (i). Form of case

Two or more respondents may, at their own risk as to costs, lodge separate cases (k).

Each party after lodging his case must forthwith give notice to the other party (l).

84 The party who lodges his case first may, at any time after the expiration of three clear days after notice of lodgment of his case, serve the other party (if he has not lodged his case) with a "case notice" requiring him to lodge his case within one month from service of the case notice, and informing him that in default the appeal will be set down for hearing ex parte against him. If the other party fails to comply with the case notice, the party who has lodged his case may, at any time after the expiration of the time limited by the case notice, lodge an affidavit of service (setting out the terms of the case notice), and the appeal, if all other conditions for being set down are satisfied, is to be set down ex parte as against the party in default. No case notice, however, may be served until after the completion of the printing of the record. The taxing officer in adjusting the costs of the appeal may inquire generally into the circumstances in which the case notice was served, and, if satisfied that there was no reasonable necessity for serving it, may disallow the costs of it to the party serving it. The "Case notice"

Setting down. 85 Subject to the rules as to procedure on non-appearance of the respondent (n), and as to case notice, an appeal is to be set down ipso facto as soon as the cases on both sides are lodged, and the parties thereupon are to exchange cases by handing one another ten copies of their respective cases (o)

As soon as the appeal is set down the appellant must attend at the registry and obtain ten copies of the record and cases, and have them bound in the prescribed manner (p) for the use of the Judicial Committee. The several documents indicated by incuts are to be arranged in the following order: (1) appellant's case, (2) respondent's case, (3) record, (4) supplementary record, if any (q) The appellant must lodge the bound copies not less than four clear days before the commencement of the sittings at which the appeal is to be heard (r).

(viii) The Hearing

Day of hearing

86 Where the Judicial Committee have appointed a day for the commencement of the sittings for the hearing of appeals, the registrar must, as far as in him lies, make the appointed day known to the agents of all parties concerned, and name a day on or before which appeals must be set down, if they are to be entered in the list of business for the sitting. All appeals set down on or before the day named are, subject to any directions from the committee or agreements between the parties, to be entered in such list of business, and, subject to directions from the committee, are to be heard in the order in which they are set down (s)

The registrar of the Privy Council, subject to the rule as to non-appearing respondents (t), is to notify the parties to each appeal by summons, at the earliest possible date, of the day appointed for the hearing of their appeal, and the parties must be in readiness on that day (u)

The hearing

87 The hearing is at the bar of the Privy Council. The appellant's counsel begins and has a right of reply (a). Not more than two counsel will be heard on a side (b). Several parties

Where legal points of importance arise, especially if the committee who heard the appeal disagree or entertain doubts, the committee will hear and, if necessary, direct further argument, in which case one counsel will be heard on each side (f) Re-argument may also be necessary in case of the death before judgment of one of the judges who heard the appeal (g).

88 The committee are very unwilling to entertain any point not duly raised and considered in the court below (h), but when a question is raised for the first time on the construction of a document, or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent, but expedient, in the interests of justice to entertain the plea (i) And if the point is patent on the face of the record, the court will deal with it although it was not taken in the court below (k).  The costs of appeals are in the discretion of the committee (a).

92 Where the Judicial Committee after hearing an appeal reserve their judgment thereon, the registrar must, in due course, notify the parties who attended the hearing of the appeal by summons of the day appointed for the delivery of the judgment (b).

Taxation of costs

93 All bills of costs are to be referred to the registrar of the Privy Council, or such other person as the Judicial Committee may appoint, for taxation. A scale of fees is prescribed by which such taxations are regulated (c). Only costs incurred in England are to be taxed in England (d).

The registrar must, with all convenient speed after the Judicial Committee have given their decision as to the costs of any matter, issue to the party to whom costs have been awarded an order to tax, and notice of the day and hour appointed by him for taxation. This party must, not less than forty-eight hours before the time appointed for taxation, lodge his bill of costs (with all necessary vouchers) and serve the opposite party with a copy of his bill of costs and of the order to tax and notice (e).

If a party fails to lodge his bill of costs and vouchers within the prescribed time, or otherwise delays or impedes the taxation, the taxing officer may, if he thinks fit, disallow his charges for drawing his bill of costs and attending the taxation (f).

Appeal.

Any party aggrieved by a taxation may appeal by way of motion to the Judicial Committee. Three clear days' notice of the motion must be given to the opposite party, and a copy of the notice is to be left in the registry of the Privy Council (g).

The amount allowed on taxation is, subject to appeal to the Judicial Committee and to any direction from them to the contrary, to be inserted in the Order in Council determining the matter (h).

Pauper scale.

Where costs are directed to be taxed on the pauper scale, no fees to counsel are to be allowed, and agents are only to be awarded out-of-pocket expenses to cover office expenses, taken at about three-eighths of the usual professional charges in such matters (i).

Security.

Applications to be excused from compliance with any rules are to be addressed to the registrar of the Privy Council, who is to take the instructions of the Judicial Committee thereon, and communicate them to the parties. If the registrar thinks it desirable, or either of the parties so requests in writing, the application will be dealt with in open court. In such a case the application is to be put in the paper for hearing on a day appointed by the committee, and notice is to be given to the parties interested of the time appointed (l).

If the registrar is of opinion, or either of the parties requests in writing, that the application may be dealt with in open court, the application will be so dealt with. In such a case the application is to be put in the paper for hearing on a day appointed by the Judicial Committee, and notice is to be given to the parties interested of the time appointed (m).

The petition must be left in the office in duplicate with an office copy of the decree or order appealed against (h).

When the appeal has been referred to the Judicial Committee, the inhibition and citation and monition for process are issued by the registrar (i). If the respondent desires to adhere (o) to the appeal, he must within one month of appearance lodge declaration of adherence stating from what part of the decree of the court below he desires to appeal (p). The appellant must bring in sixty printed copies of the appendix (q) within one month of the process being brought in and deliver forty copies to the respondent (r). Both parties are to bring in sixty printed copies of their respective cases within one month of the appendix being brought in and deliver forty copies to the opposite party (s). ## Part V.—The Supreme Court of Judicature.

SECT. 1—Constitution.

106 The Supreme Court of Judicature was constituted in 1873 (a) as from 2nd November, 1874 (b), and in it there were consolidated the High Court of Chancery of England, the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, the Court of Exchequer, the High Court of Admiralty, the Court of Probate, the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, and the London Court of Bankruptcy (c). In the next year, 1874, however, the constitution of the court was postponed until 1st November, 1875 (d). Before this deferred constitution the London Court of Bankruptcy was severed from the Supreme Court (e), but was again consolidated with that court as from and after 31st December, 1883 (f). The Supreme Court is regulated by the Judicature Acts, 1873 to 1902 (g), and consists of two permanent divisions (h). His Majesty's High Court of Justice and His Majesty's Court of Appeal (i).

SECT. 2—His Majesty's High Court of Justice.

SUB-SECT. 1—Jurisdiction

(1) In General

107 To the High Court of Justice were transferred the jurisdiction possessed by the High Court of Chancery (k) (including its common law jurisdiction), the Court of Queen's Bench (l), the

(k) The old Court of Chancery consisted of two separate tribunals—an ordinary court of common law and a court of equity. Of these the court of common law was the most ancient, and had jurisdiction in personal actions where a minister or officer of the court was concerned, in scire facias to cancel patents, or to partition lands held in coparceny, and in other matters. From this court issued out commissions of bankruptcy, lunacy, relating to charities, etc. "Chancery (Cancellaria) is the Highest Court of Judicature in this Kingdom, next to the Parliament, and of very ancient Institution. The Extraordinary Court or Court of Equity, proceeds by the Rules of Equity and Conscience, and moderates the Rigour of the Common Law, considering the intention rather than the words of the Law. It gives relief for and against Infants, notwithstanding their Minority. And for and against married Women, notwithstanding their Coverture. All Frauds and Deceits, for which there is no Redress at Common Law; all Breach of Trust and Confidences, and Accidents, as to relieve Obligors, Mortgagees, &c., against Penalties and Forfeitures, where the Intent was to pay the Debt, are here remedied. Also this Court will give relief against the Extremity of unreasonable Engagements, entered into without Consideration, oblige Creditors that are unreasonable to compound with an unfortunate Debtor and make Executors &c., give security and pay interest for Money that is to lie long in their hands (Anon (1679) 2 Vent 346). Here Executors may sue one another, or one Executor alone be sued without the rest. Order may be made for Performance of a Will. It may be decreed who shall have the Tutelage of a Child. This Court may confirm Title to Lands, though one has lost his Writings, Render Conveyances defective through Mistake &c., good and perfect, but not Defects in a voluntary Conveyance, unless where intended as a Provision for younger Children (Bonham v Newcomb (1684) 2 Vent 365). In Chancery Copyholders may be relieved against the ill-Usage of their Lords. Inclosures of Lands that are Common be decreed, and this Court may decree Money or Lands given to charitable uses, Things in Action, upon Assignment on consideration. Oblige men to account with each other. Avoid the Bar of Actions, by the Statute of Limitations, &c., for Debts thus barred, are still Debts in Equity and the Duty remains (Anon (1707) 1 Salk 164). But in all cases, where the Plaintiff can have his Remedy at Law, he ought not to be relieved in Chancery and a thing which may be tried by a Jury is not triable in this Court." (Jacob's Law Dictionary, sub voce Chancery)

(l) The jurisdiction of this court was civil and criminal. The civil jurisdiction was on what was called the plea side of the court. The civil jurisdiction, at first more limited, had become extended to all actions between subject and subject, except where the revenue of the Crown was affected, or where the title to realty was in question. On the plea side the court also exercised appellate jurisdiction from the palatinate courts, inferior courts of record, and from the Inclosure Commissioners (Inclosure Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118), s. 4). The criminal jurisdiction, on the Crown side, extended to all offences of whatever nature, to articles of the peace, and to habeas corpus, also to certiorari, mandamus, and quo warranto. "King's Bench is the Court or Judgment Seat where the King of England was sometimes wont to sit in his own person, and was therefore moveable with the Court or King's Household, and called Curia Domini Regis or Aula Regis." and by Statute 28 Ed. 1, c. 5 this court is to follow the King. King Henry III. several times sat in person with the Judges in Banco Regis, being seated on a High Bench, and the Judges at a lower one at his feet. And the King's Bench was originally the only Court in Westminster Hall; out of which the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer seem to have been derived. This Court is the Custos morum of all the subjects of the realm, and where it meets

(m) "Gwyn in the Preface of his Reading, says that till Henry III granted the great Charter, there were but two Courts, called the King's Courts, viz, the King's Bench and the Exchequer and that upon the Grant of that Charter, the Court of Common Pleas was erected and settled in one certain Place, i.e. Westminster Hall But Sir Edward Coke is of Opinion in his preface to the eighth Report, that the Court of Common Pleas was constituted before the Conquest, and was not created by Magna Charta, at which time there were justiciarii de Banco, &c. . . The jurisdiction of this Court is general and extends itself throughout England It holds pleas of all Civil Causes at Common Law, between subject and subject, in actions real personal and mixed" (see title ACTION, Vol I, pp 31 et seq), "and it seems to have been the only Court for real causes In personal and mixed actions it hath a concurrent jurisdiction with the King's Bench But hath no cognizance of Pleas of the Crown, and Common Pleas are all that are not such" (Jacob's Law Dictionary, sub voce Common Pleas) It was the court of appeal from revising barristers (Parliamentary Voters Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict c 18), s 60) It had also jurisdiction under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will 4, c 74), ss 81, 83, the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict c 31), ss 3, 4, 5, and as to election petitions under the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 12a), s 7

(n) This court had exclusive jurisdiction in matters affecting the revenue of the Crown "Exchequer (M E Eschequer, a O F Eschequer a chess-board) The name originally referred to the table covered with a cloth divided into squares, on which the accounts of the Revenue were kept by means of counters 3 (more fully Court of Exchequer, Exchequer of Pleas) a court of law, historically representing the Anglo-Norman exchequer in its judicial capacity The jurisdiction of the Court was theoretically confined to matters of revenue, but in practice was gradually extended to all kinds of cases (except 'real actions') by means of the legal fiction that the wrong suffered by the plaintiff had rendered him unable to pay his debts to the King" (New English Dictionary, Vol III, E, p 378) Up to 1842 it had also an equity side, but this was transferred to the High Court of Chancery by the Court of Chancery Act, 1841 (5 Vict c 5), s 1

(o) The High Court of Admiralty (constituted a court of record by the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 10), s 14), had at the date of the Judicature Act lost its criminal jurisdiction except under the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 90) Its civil jurisdiction extended to all maritime actions, whether in rem or in personam, and was equitable as well as legal, and appellate as well as original This court had also jurisdiction as a prize court (Naval Prize Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict c 26))

(p) The Court of Probate was established as a court of record by the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 77), and had jurisdiction to grant and revoke probates and letters of administration and to decide all questions in matters testamentary

(q) This court was established as a court of record by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 85), with exclusive jurisdiction in all causes, suits, and matters matrimonial

(r) This court was established as a principal court of record by the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 71) It was a court of equity as well as of law, and the chief judge possessed all the jurisdiction of a judge of one of the superior courts of common law, and of a judge of the High Court of Chancery, in addition to his special jurisdiction in bankruptcy. See p. 56, post

(s) The Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster had within the county palatine a concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of common law in personal actions and in ejectment

(u.) Original Jurisdiction.

108 The jurisdiction of the High Court is both original and appellate. The original jurisdiction is general, and extends to all causes of action and is unlimited in amount (c). It includes the whole of the original jurisdiction of the courts before mentioned, except the jurisdiction in lunacy of the Lord Chancellor or the Lords Justices of Appeal in Chancery (d), the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor as to patents (e) and commissions, or as the visitor of any college or foundation, and that of the Master of the Rolls as to records (f). The court has also jurisdiction to grant a mandamus or an injunction or to appoint a receiver by an interlocutory order (g). The effect of the Judicature Acts, and the rules made under them, is not (except as expressed) to alter the jurisdiction of the High Court as transferred thereto by the Act of 1873 (h).

The civil jurisdiction of the High Court includes all causes and matters whatever, except prize causes (i), certain excepted lunacy matters (j), and actions within a franchise of cognisance of pleas, but only where the lord of the franchise claims his right (k).

The court also exercises the functions of the King as visitor of all civil corporations, and thus has jurisdiction to relieve any freeman in city, borough, or town corporate, who is unjustly disfranchised (l).

The jurisdiction of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division in admiralty, matrimonial and succession matters is dealt with elsewhere (m).

The trial of parliamentary election petitions is conducted before two judges of the King's Bench Division selected from a rota appointed annually (n). The court has also jurisdiction as to municipal election petitions (o).

Divisional
courts

109 Divisional courts have original jurisdiction in cases of habeas corpus, where the judge directs the rule  nisi or the writ to be returnable there, in special cases under the London Government Act, 1899 (p), and in applications to strike solicitors off the rolls (q).

110. The original criminal jurisdiction of the High Court extends over all indictable offences against the law of England, and is exercised either in the King's Bench Division or under the commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery (r) on circuit, at the Central Criminal Court (s), or directed to special commissioners (t).

In the case of criminal informations (u), whether by the Attorney-General ex-officio or on relation, or to enforce a pecuniary penalty in which the informer as well as the Crown has an interest, the criminal jurisdiction of the High Court is only exercised in the King's Bench Division

Where on application an indictment has been removed into the King's Bench Division for trial (v), or where an indictment is found by the grand jury in the King's Bench Division (x), the King's Bench Division has exclusive jurisdiction to try the cause

The trial in the King's Bench Division is held before one judge, unless on motion an order has been made by the court that the trial shall be at bar (a).

111 Offences by Colonial Governors (b) and other public officers abroad (c) are triable in the King's Bench Division, either on information exhibited by the Attorney-General or upon indictment found in the division, as are also offences committed by the Governor-General of India, Lieutenant-Governors, Justices of the High Courts, and other public officers in India. Extortion and other misdemeanours committed by public officers in India are also triable in the King's Bench Division (d), if the Attorney-General or the other prosecutors elect to proceed therein instead of claiming a trial before the special commission which has jurisdiction in such cases (e)

112 The King's Bench Division has also jurisdiction to try persons accused of wilfully neglecting or delaying to deliver parliamentary writs (f)

113 The criminal jurisdiction of the High Court also extends over offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England (g), and can be exercised either at the Central Criminal Court (h) or under commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery (i).

Bankruptcy

114 In Bankruptcy the jurisdiction of the High Court is both original and appellate. The original jurisdiction extends to those cases in which it is proposed to present a petition against a debtor who has resided or carried on business within the London bankruptcy district, i.e., the City of London and the districts of the Metropolitan County Courts (k), for the greater part of the six months immediately preceding the presentation of the petition, or for a longer period during those six months than in the district of any county court, or who is not resident in England, or whose residence the petitioning creditor is unable to ascertain (l).

An appeal lies in bankruptcy matters, at the instance of any person aggrieved, from the order of a county court to a divisional court of the High Court of Justice, of which the judge to whom bankruptcy business is for the time being assigned is to be a member. The decision of such divisional court is final and conclusive, unless the divisional court or the Court of Appeal give special leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal, whose decision in such a case is final and conclusive (m).

Winding up

115 In company winding-up matters, the High Court has also original and appellate jurisdiction. The original jurisdiction applies to cases where the amount of the share capital of the company paid up or credited as paid up exceeds £10,000, except that in cases where the registered office of the company is situated within the jurisdiction of either of the Chancery courts of the counties palatine of Lancaster or Durham such Chancery court has concurrent jurisdiction (n), and except in cases of companies formed for working mines within the stannaries, which are not shown to be actually working mines nor to be engaged in any other undertaking beyond those limits (o).

It has jurisdiction to try suits of possession (q), questions between co-owners (r), disputes as to mortgages (s), bottomry and respondentia (t), claims for necessaries (u), claims for towage (x); wages, master's wages and disbursements (a); collisions (b), damage to cargo (c); limitation of liability (d), salvage (e); droits of admiralty (f), forfeiture (g); booty of war (h), prize (i), slave trade (k), claims for payment of substitutes for seamen volunteering into the Navy (l).

(m) Service out of the Jurisdiction.

117 As to service out of the jurisdiction there is no absolute right to such service in any case, but it is a question for the exercise of his discretion by the judge (m), and, in exercising such discretion, the judge should consider all the circumstances of the case and affidavits relating to the facts of the case, so far as may be necessary to see whether the plaintiff has a probable cause of action or not (n).

119 The application for leave to serve out of the jurisdiction must be supported by an affidavit, or other evidence, stating that, in the belief of the deponent, the plaintiff has a good cause of action, showing in what place or country the defendant is or may probably be found, stating whether the defendant is a British subject or not, and the grounds on which the application is made. No such leave must be granted unless it is made sufficiently to appear that it is a proper case for service out of the jurisdiction (r).

Where the defendant is neither a British subject nor in British dominions notice of the writ, and not the writ itself, is to be served on him (s).

(p) R. S. C., Ord 11, r 2. This provision does not apply to actions for breach of contract, in which actions, if the defendant is domiciled or ordinarily resident in Scotland or Ireland, he cannot be served out of the jurisdiction (Lenders v Anderson (1883), 12 Q. B. D. 50).

(q) R. S. C., Ord 11, r 3, and see title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

(r) Ibid., r 4.

(s) Ibid., r 6. Particular rules (R. S. C., Ord 11, r 8) apply to service of notice of a writ of summons in the case of countries to which they have been applied by order of the Lord Chancellor. These countries are the German Empire (Order, 4th July, 1904, [1904] W. N., Pt II, p 231), and the Russian Empire (Order, 21st March, [1906] W. N., Pt II, p 99). It is proposed to apply these rules to orders and notices directed to be served on any person in a foreign country, see draft R. S. C., July, 1909 (127 L. T. Jo 275). The judges of the High Court 132 The judges of the High Court are the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice of England, the Master of the Rolls, the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, and twenty-two puisne judges. In interlocutory matters two judges of the Court of Appeal constitute a court, but in final matters three are required(i), by consent of the parties, however, such appeals may be heard by two judges only, but if the two judges differ in opinion the case must be re argued before three judges before appeal to the House of Lords(h)

137 The Court of Appeal at present consists of the Lord Chancellor, who is the president of the court, the Lord Chief Justice of England, the Master of the Rolls, the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division(l) (these are ex-officio judges), and five ordinary members of the court, entitled Lords Justices of Appeal. Ex-Lord Chancellors of Great Britain are also ex-officio members of the Court of Appeal(m)

The qualification for a Lord Justice of Appeal is to be a barrister of fifteen years' standing or to have been a judge of the High Court for not less than a year(n)

The Lord Chancellor may also request the attendance at any time of any judge of the High Court to sit as an additional judge at the sittings of the Court of Appeal, and any judge whose attendance is so requested must attend accordingly. Every judge so attending is to be deemed an additional judge of the Court of Appeal(o)

Every judge of the Court of Appeal holds his office during good behaviour, and is only removable on an address to the Crown by both Houses of Parliament(p)

make rules

138 A council of the judges of the Supreme Court must assemble at least once in each year to consider procedure and the administration of justice (u). The power of making rules to regulate the practice and procedure of the Supreme Court was at first vested in the Lord Chancellor and certain other judges (a), but in 1881 this power was transferred to the present Rule Committee (b), which consists of the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls, the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, and four other judges appointed by the Lord Chancellor. Rules may be made by any five members of the Rule Committee, of whom the Lord Chancellor must be one. The President and judges of the Court of Appeal have power to make regulations as to the conduct of business in the Court of Appeal (c). Rules of court made by the Rule Committee must be laid before both Houses of Parliament within forty days if Parliament is sitting, and if not, within forty days of the beginning of the next sitting. There is also power to annul any rules by Order in Council on an address from either House (d).

Under the above powers the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, have been made, and since amended and added to by many sets of subsequent rules (e).

There are many other rule-making powers contained in different statutes relating to particular subjects (f). Practice rules are also made by the masters, these, however, are not made under any statutory power.

The procedure of the court in criminal proceedings is regulated by the Crown Office Rules, 1906 (g).

SUB SECT. 1 — Official Referees

139 Official referees are (h) permanent officers attached to the Supreme Court for the purpose of acting as arbitrators under submissions to them (i), or of inquiring into and reporting on any question arising in a cause or matter referred to them by a judge (j), or of trying causes or matters referred to them for trial (k). Three of these officers are appointed, the qualification is that they should be either barristers or solicitors of ten years' standing (l).

Rules have been made in regard to the powers and duties of official referees (m).

SUB-SECT. 2 — Examiners

Examiners

140 A sufficient number of barristers-at-law, of not less than three years' standing, are appointed by the Lord Chancellor to act as examiners of the court for five years. Their duties are to take examinations under orders of the court in all divisions of the High Court, except in admiralty actions (n). Examinations are distributed among them in rotation (o). They are paid by fees which are prescribed by rules of the Supreme Court (p). In determining the place and time of examinations the convenience of the witnesses and the circumstances of the case are to be considered (q).

Special examiners may also be appointed to take the evidence of any witness at any place (r).

SUB-SECT. 3 — Masters of the Supreme Court

(1) King's Bench Division

Masters in King's Bench
Division

141 There are seven masters of the Supreme Court (King's Bench Division). Of these the senior master is the King's Remembrancer (s). The office of King's Coroner and Master of the Crown Office is held by a master (at present the senior master) under appointment by the Lord Chief Justice (t).

Assistant
masters.

There are also two assistant masters, one of whom is attached to the Crown Office, and the other to the Court Orders and Associates Department of the Crown Office.

142 The duties of these masters comprise—(1) the control and superintendence of the Central Office of the Supreme Court (u); (2) judicial work in chambers (a), and (3) issuing directions on points of practice. They have also jurisdiction to refer actions for inquiry and report, or for trial (b).

Sect. 8.
Officers and Central Office.

masters.

Three masters sit daily in chambers, where they adjudicate on summonses, subject to an appeal to the judge. In this capacity they have the jurisdiction conferred on, or transferred to, "the court or a judge" by the Rules of the Supreme Court. A master can exercise, with certain exceptions, all the jurisdiction of a judge in chambers under the Judicature Acts or the Rules of the Supreme Court, or the Arbitration Act (c). One master, according to the rota arranged between all the masters, sits daily as practice master, he has to be present at and control the business of the Central Office, and to give the necessary directions as to practice and procedure (d).

143 The masters are appointed by the Lord Chief Justice and the Master of the Rolls alternately (e). The qualification is to be a practising barrister or special pleader or solicitor of five years' standing (f). The tenure of the office is during good behaviour (g).

Appointment.

(u) Chancery Division

144 There are twelve masters of the Supreme Court (Chancery Division) (h). To every two judges in that division there are assigned four of these masters. They have a staff of clerks to assist them.

Masters in Chancery
Division

The masters (h) in the Chancery Division have no independent jurisdiction as have those of the King's Bench Division, all their authority is derived from the judge to whom they are assigned, and everything they do is done in his name (i), or by way of certificate. Any party, also, is entitled to have any question brought before the judge and to see him personally, and that even if the point be not disputed (k). The duties of these masters are to make investigations and take accounts etc., under the direction of the judge (l).

Central
Office.

A certificate of a master does not require the express approval of the judge, but on an application by motion or summons the certificate may be discharged or varied (m).

The qualification for master of the Supreme Court (Chancery Division) is to have been admitted and practised as a solicitor for ten years (n).

(iii) Taxing Office

Taxing office and taxing
masters

145. The Central Office of the Supreme Court conducts the business formerly conducted by the Chancery taxing office, of the Bankruptcy taxing office, of the taxing department of the office of the masters in lunacy, and of the taxing office of the Registrar in Companies Winding-up (o). All taxations of costs in the Chancery and King's Bench Divisions take place in a department of the Central Office called the Supreme Court taxing office. There are eleven masters of the Supreme Court (taxing office), one of whom sits daily to deal with short and urgent cases, while other cases are referred to some one of these masters.

There is, apparently, no qualification prescribed for the appointment of a master of the Supreme Court (taxing office) (p). A master has the right, subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor, to appoint a deputy in case of absence from illness or other reasonable cause (q). A master may not practice as a barrister or solicitor, and if the latter, he must be struck off the roll on appointment (r).

SUB SECT. 4 — Registrars of the Chancery Division.

Registrars

146 There may be thirteen (s) registrars of the Chancery Division (t). They attend the judges of the Chancery Division and the Court of Appeal upon the hearing of appeals from the Chancery Division. Their duties are to take notes of the orders and judgments given, and to draw up and settle and pass them. They have also to keep distinct lists of the causes and matters set down to be heard before each judge of the Chancery Division.

On the occurrence of a vacancy in the office of registrar, the senior of the clerks to the registrars, to whom no sufficient objection to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor shall be made, is to be appointed registrar (u).

• In case of illness a registrar, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, and on failure by the registrar, the Lord Chancellor, may appoint a deputy (b).

SUB-SECT. 5—Central Office of the Supreme Court

147. The Central Office of the Supreme Court was created in 1879 (c), and consists of the following departments (d):— (1) Writ Appearance and Judgment Department; (2) Summons and Order Department, (3) Filing and Record Department, (4) Taxing Office, (5) Enrolment Department, (6) Judgments and Married Women's Acknowledgments Department, (6) Bills of Sale Department, (8) King's Remembrancer's Department, (9) Crown Office; (10) Associates Department. It is staffed by first, second, and third class clerks, appointed by the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, and the Master of the Rolls in rotation. These clerks are removable by a majority of these judges, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, for reasons to be assigned in the order of removal (e).

The Central Office.

SUB-SECT. 6—Paymaster General and Pay Office

148 The office of His Majesty's Paymaster-General was established in 1835. The appointment is by warrant under the Royal Sign Manual.

Paymaster-
General.

In 1872 the business of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery was transferred to the Paymaster-General (f), and in 1833 (g) all the accounting departments of the Supreme Court of Judicature were consolidated into the pay office of the Supreme Court. This office, which is the Paymaster-General's office for the business of the Supreme Court, is regulated by the Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1905 (h). All moneys and funds which are paid into or out of court pass through this office. It is under the assistant paymaster-general for Supreme Court business. This officer has under him a deputy assistant paymaster-general and a staff of clerks. All securities and moneys in court are vested in the Paymaster-General for and on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature (i).

SUB-SECT. 7—District Registrars

149 District registrars of the High Court of Justice are appointed under the Order in Council constituting the district registry, which may provide that any registrar of any county court, or any registrar, or prothonotary, or district prothonotary, of any local court the jurisdiction of which was abolished by the

Judicature Act, 1878 (k), or from which an appeal was thereby given to the Court of Appeal, or any person who, having been a district registrar of the Court of Probate or of the Court of Admiralty, becomes a registrar of the High Court, shall be a registrar of the High Court (l) Registrars of any inferior court of record having jurisdiction in any part of the district defined by the Order in Council constituting the district registry are also qualified (m) If the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Treasury, considers it expedient from the nature and extent of the business that the office should be conferred on some person not qualified as above, it is lawful for him to appoint a solicitor of five years' standing (n)

The district registrar may, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor and subject to regulations made by the Lord Chancellor, appoint a deputy for a period not exceeding three months (o)

There is a statutory power to establish district registries by Order in Council (p)

Duties of
registrars

150 The registrars have power to administer oaths and perform such duties as shall be assigned to them by rules of court (q) Writs of summons may be issued, and further proceedings down to and including entry for trial, and, in case of non-appearance of the defendant, down to and including final judgment, may be had in the district registry (r), where also accounts and inquiries may be taken, and books and documents produced (s)

Procedure

151 The proceedings in district registries are regulated by rules of court (t) These rules provide that leave to enter judgments in default of appearance (u), leave to enter interlocutory judgments against third parties (v), leave to issue or renew writs of execution, examinations of judgment debtors, garnishee orders, charging orders visi, and interpleader orders, are to be taken in the district registry (c)

A district registrar has all the authority and jurisdiction of a master of the Supreme Court either of the King's Bench or the Chancery Division so far as relates to proceedings in the district registry (d)

SUB-SECT 8 — Officers of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division

153 The offices of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division are separate from the Central Office of the Supreme Court, and are located at Somerset House, except the Admiralty Registry, which is at the Royal Courts of Justice. There are four probate registrars, who deal with summonses in probate and divorce matters in a similar manner to masters of the Supreme Court in matters in the King's Bench Division (i). They are assisted by a staff of clerks. There are also forty district probate registrars, who deal with non-contentious matters in probate.

154 The Admiralty Registry has a registrar, an assistant registrar or marshal, and a staff of clerks. There is also an admiralty district registrar at Liverpool, the limits of whose registry may be fixed by Order in Council (k).

SUB-SECT 9 — The Official Solicitor

155 Formerly known as the Solicitor to the Sutors' Fund, and then as the solicitor to the High Court of Chancery, this officer has, since the Judicature Act, borne the title of Official Solicitor of the Supreme Court, and has no longer any duties to discharge with reference to funds in court. A relic of his former connection with those funds, however, survives in the requirement that a copy of every petition or summons for dealing with funds which have been placed in the list of dormant funds shall, where the fund amounts to or exceeds £500, be served on him unless the court or judge shall otherwise direct (l).

The present duties of the office are of a very general nature, and include visiting prisoners confined in Brixton or Holloway Prisons for contempt of court, and carrying out the instructions of the Lord Chancellor as respects such prisoners (m), acting as solicitor to parties defending actions in forma pauperis, if so directed by the court under special circumstances (n), acting as guardian ad litem to infants and persons of unsound mind not so found by inquisition (o), conducting sales by order of the court if the parties to

Where there is undue delay in any proceedings under any judgment or order he may be required to take steps to expedite matters, or to himself conduct the proceedings (r).

SECT. 6—The Circuit System.

SUB-SECT. 1—In General

The circuits

156. Judges go into every county except Middlesex (s) under commissions of the peace (t), of oyer and terminer (u), of general gaol delivery (v) of assize (w), incident to the commission of assize is the jurisdiction to try causes at nisi prius. These commissions enable them to try criminal and civil cases in the several counties. Sometimes King's Counsel are employed as special commissioners to relieve the judges from part of their work. The names of all the judges and of the King's Counsel and counsel having patents of precedence practising on the respective circuits are usually included in the commission (x). There is power to include in any commission of assize, oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery the name of any county court judge (y). There are seven circuits (z).

LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND As to costs see R S O, Ord 65, r 13 (Goutly v Jones, [1907] W N 161, Eady v Elsdon, [1901] 2 K B 460, O A).

(r) R S O, Ord 33, r 9, Ord 65, r 11, and see Re Corsellis (1884), 50 L. T. 703, O A.

(s) From very early times judges of the superior courts of common law were sent into every county annually to try actions. Previously to the introduction of this system what were called "eyres" were held not oftener than once in seven years in each county, commissions of assize were also issued for the trial of actions of novel disseisin and mort d'ancestor, which were very numerous.

(t) The names of all the judges are included in the commission of the peace for each county. The commission of the peace binds the sheriffs and justices to give attendance on the judges.

(u) The commission of oyer and terminer empowers the judges to try persons not in gaol for treasons, felonies etc.

(v) The commission of general gaol delivery empowers the judges to try every prisoner in the gaol committed for any offence whatever, so as to clear the gaol of prisoners.

(w) The commission of assize empowers the judges to try civil actions.

(y) County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s 16.

(z) There were formerly six circuits—the Northern, the Midland, the Norfolk, the Home, the Oxford, and the Western, to these were added the North Wales and the South Wales Circuit. These circuits were discontinued by an Order in Council (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol XII, Supreme Court, England, p 22) made under the Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), and new circuits were appointed. For a list of the circuits see title BARRISTERS, Vol II., p 366, and Order in Council of 28th June, 1909 (London Gazette, July 2, 1909).

SUB-SECT 2.—*Assizes.*SECT. 4.
The Circuit System.

Assizes.

157. Assizes are held four times in the year (a), but if not more than five days before the commission day it appears to the clerk of assize that there is no business to be transacted requiring the attendance of jurors, he may give notice dispensing with the attendance of jurors (b). In such a case it is not necessary to hold the court of assize unless there is any other business to be transacted which does not require the attendance of jurors (c).

At the summer and winter assizes both civil and criminal business is taken on all circuits. At the autumn circuit only criminal business is taken, except at Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, and Swansea. At the Easter circuit civil and criminal business is taken at Manchester and Liverpool, and criminal only at Leeds (d).

SUB SECT 3.—Officers

158 The principal officer in connection with assizes is the clerk of assize (e). His duties are to open the assize by reading the assize.

(a) Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol XII, Supreme Court, England, p 49. In ancient times assizes were held in all counties—twice in the year, that is, in the spring and autumn vacations—except in the counties of York and Lancaster, where no assizes were held in spring. In the eighteenth century it became a common practice to issue commissions for assizes to be held in winter—that is, in the vacation following Michaelmas term. These latter winter assizes are regulated by the Winter Assizes Acts, 1876 and 1877 (39 & 40 Vict c 57, 40 & 41 Vict c 46). Under these Acts counties may be united for the purpose of holding winter assizes. This power was extended to spring assizes by the Spring Assizes Act, 1879 (42 Vict c 1). This is done by Orders in Council, which are issued annually. These Orders in Council are printed and put on sale as statutory rules and orders, under the Rules Publication Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 66), and the rules made thereunder (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol XI, Statutory Rule, p 1). Orders in Council are also in force regulating the assizes in Lancashire (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol XII, Supreme Court, England, p 9), in Yorkshire (ibid, p 16), fixing commission days and the places for winter and summer assizes, making special regulations for Warwickshire, and as to Chancery and other causes at Liverpool and Manchester (ibid, p 27), as to the termination of the winter assizes (ibid, p 38), amending the order as to places for holding assizes (ibid, p 39), as to commission days, as to the autumn, winter and Easter assizes on the Northern Circuit, and as to winter assizes on the North and South Wales Circuits (ibid, p 49), as to summer and winter assizes on the North and South Wales Circuits (ibid, p 51), and two orders made in 1907 altering the dates for holding assizes in consequence of the alteration of the commencement of the Long Vacation (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1907, p 1015, 1016). The Winter Assizes Acts, 1876 and 1877 (39 & 40 Vict c 57, 40 & 41 Vict c 46), and the Spring Assizes Act, 1879 (42 Vict c 1), give power to His Majesty by Order in Council to extend the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court during the months from September to May inclusive over the neighbouring counties. Orders in Council are made annually under these powers (see table of Temporary Orders at the end of the annual volumes of Statutory Rules and Orders). See also title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, p 266, post.

(d) A new arrangement of the dates of the holding of assizes was made by Order in Council of 28th June, 1909 (London Gazette, July 2, 1909).

(e) The duties of a clerk of assize under the old practice are set out in detail in "The Clerk of Assize, Judges-Marshall and Crier being the true Manner and Form of the Proceedings at the Assizes and General Gaol-Delivery, both in the Crown Court, and Nisi Prius Court, and The Right ways of entering of may be altered by quarter sessions (o). In these divisions the sittings of the justices out of quarter sessions are called petty sessions. Every sitting and acting of justices of the peace, or of a stipendiary magistrate, in and for any city, borough, or town corporate, having a separate commission of the peace, or any part thereof, within England and Wales, at any police court or other places appointed in that behalf, is a petty sessions of the peace, and the district for which the same is held is a petty sessional division.

SECT. 1.
Courts of Summary
Jurisdiction.

A petty sessional court is defined (p) as a court of summary jurisdiction consisting of two or more justices, when sitting in a petty sessional court-house, and includes the Lord Mayor of the City of London, and any alderman of that city, and any metropolitan or borough police magistrate, or other stipendiary magistrate, when sitting in a court-house or place at which he is authorised by law to do alone any act authorised to be done by more than one justice of the peace (q).

Petty sessional
court.

Convictions on summary proceedings before justices are matters of record (r). Up to 1848 they were drawn up on parchment, as was the case with all records, but now they may be on parchment or paper (s).

Convictions.

Justices are protected from actions on account of errors in judgment so long as they act within the line of their authority (t). Some authorities have doubted whether justices out of sessions acting judicially are judges of record, but the better opinion appears to be that they are (u).

Justices

SUB-SECT. 2—Jurisdiction

161 The jurisdiction of courts of summary jurisdiction and petty sessional courts extends to the hearing and determining of charges

jurisdiction

(o) Petty Sessional Divisions Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 12)

(p) I.e., a court-house or other place where justices are accustomed to assemble for holding special or petty sessions, or a place appointed as a substitute for such place.

(q) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 63), s 13

(r) "Convictions have undoubtedly always been treated as records, and for that reason they were, prior to 4 Geo 2, c 26 (now repealed), required when filed to be in Latin, therefore the returning them either to this court, or to the sessions, does not alter their character" (Chancy v Payne (1841), 1 Q B 712, per Lord DENMAN, C J, at p 724)

(s) Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 43)

(u) Busten v Carew (1825), 3 B & C 649. "It maketh not a little, both for maintenance of the peace, and for the credit of the justices thereof, that they are numbered amongst the judges of record" (Lambard, Eirenarcha, Bk 1, c. xiii). "Now touching our justice of the peace, it is the opinion of the court (Y B, 9 Edw 4, c 3, 14 Hen 8, c 16) and of divers other books in our law, that every one of them (even by himself) is a judge of record, for . . . he may take a recognizance of the peace which none other can do but a judge of record, because the knowledging of that summe is to remain as a matter of record" (ibid.).

SECT. I.
Courts of Summary
Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction over indictable offences.

162. There is also jurisdiction as to certain indictable offences:—

(1) In the case of young persons consenting to the justices dealing with the charge, over all indictable offences other than homicide (q); (2) where adults plead guilty to charges of simple larceny, offences punishable as simple larceny, and other kindred offences (r); (3) where adults consent, over like offences where the value of the whole of the property the subject of the offence does not in the opinion of the court exceed 40s (s), and (4) trivial case of libel in newspapers (t)

These courts may take the examinations of persons charged with indictable offences, and commit them to prison to await their trial, or bind them over to appear at the assizes or sessions as the case may be (u), and may order persons to enter into recognisances and to find sureties to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour (x).

163 Courts of summary jurisdiction have also civil or quasi civil jurisdiction as to bastardy (a), dogs (b), harbours (c), highway rates (d), landlord and tenant (e), master and servant (f),

In the Metropolitan Police District there is also jurisdiction to order the return of goods detained from the owner not exceeding the value of £15, and to enforce the order by committal to prison (l)

164 One justice of the peace sitting alone has jurisdiction to receive any information or complaint, and to grant a summons or warrant thereon, and to issue a summons or warrant for the attendance of witnesses, and to do all other necessary acts and matters preliminary to the hearing (a). He has also jurisdiction, when sitting alone in a petty sessional court-house, to hear and determine charges under particular statutes (b), but in such cases he may not impose a punishment exceeding imprisonment for fourteen days or a fine of 20s (c)

(e) Formerly there was a provision in the commission, "of whom A B etc, shall be one." These specially named justices were called those of the quorum. Where a statute specially requires an act to be done before two or more justices, of whom one must be of the quorum, no Act etc can be impeached, set aside, or vacated on the ground that it does not express that one of the justices is of the quorum (Justices Act, 1753 (26 Geo. 2, c 27))

Quarter

and offences and trespasses aforesaid " Further, justices are directed to make their sessions four times by the year and more often if need be (f). The sessions are directed to be held in the first week after 11th October, 28th December, 31st March, and 24th June respectively (g)

All the sessions held under this power are general sessions of the peace, but the four sessions held at the prescribed times are properly called general quarter sessions (h)

167 Two justices are necessary to constitute a general sessions of the peace, and if two are not present, there is no power to adjourn the sessions legally Thus, if two justices are not present the power to hold a quarter sessions for that quarter is lost, although a general sessions can be held before the next appointed time for quarter sessions (i)

General sessions, as distinguished from general quarter sessions, are in practice never held, except in the case of the county of London (k), the practice being, in cases where more than four sessions in the year are requisite, to adjourn the general quarter sessions (l) This is done because the jurisdiction of general quarter sessions is wider than that of other general sessions of the peace (m)

General quarter sessions and general sessions of the peace are inferior courts of record (n)

(f) Stat (1414), 2 Hen 5 stat 1, c 4 By this Act the quarter sessions were directed to be held in the first week after the feast of St Michael, the Epiphany, the feast of the close or conclusion, New English Dictionary, Vol II, p 470) of Easter, and the translation of St Thomas respectively In case not more than five days before the day for holding a court of quarter sessions it appears to the clerk of the peace that there is no business to be transacted which requires the attendance of jurors, notice may be given dispensing with the attendance of jurors (Assizes and Quarter Sessions Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 41), s 1), and in such a case it is not necessary to hold the court of quarter sessions unless there is any business, not requiring the attendance of jurors, to be transacted by the court (ibid, s 2) And see Order in Council of 28th June, 1909 (London Gazette, 2nd July, 1909)

(g) Law Terms Act, 1830 (11 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 70), s 35 By the Assizes and Quarter Sessions Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 41), s. 3, the time may be altered so as to avoid clashing with the assizes, so that the sessions are held not earlier than fourteen days before, or later than fourteen days after, the prescribed week

(h) "It seems the better opinion, that the quarter sessions are a species only of general sessions, and that such sessions are properly called general quarter sessions, which are holden in the four quarters of the year, in pursuance of the above-mentioned statute of (1414) 2 Hen 5, stat. 1, c 4, and that any other sessions holden at any other time for the general execution of the authority of justices of the peace, which by the above-mentioned statute, justices of the peace are authorised to hold oftener than at the time therein specified, if need be, may be properly called general sessions" (2 Hawk P C, c 8, s 47)

SECT. 2.

Quarter
SessionsCommission of the peace

168. A commission of the peace may be granted for a whole county, or for a riding or other division of the same (o). Coroners (p), chairmen of county councils (q), and chairmen of district councils, including mayors of boroughs other than county boroughs (r), are ex officio justices for the county. A sheriff is disqualified from acting as a justice during his term of office (s).

(2) In Boroughs.

Borough

169 In boroughs under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (t), which have the franchise of a separate court of quarter sessions, the recorder is the sole judge of the court (u), and the borough justices are not to act as justices at any court of gaol delivery or quarter sessions (a).

The recorder is to hold a court of quarter sessions in and for the borough once in every quarter of a year, or oftener, if and as he thinks fit or the Secretary of State directs (b). The recorder may in the case of sickness or unavoidable absence appoint, by writing signed by him, a barrister of five years' standing to act as deputy recorder at the quarter sessions then next ensuing, or then being held, but not longer or otherwise (c). If the recorder is by reason of illness, absence, or other cause, incapable of appointing a deputy, the Secretary of State may do so (d).

Where necessary the recorder may appoint a properly qualified assistant recorder (e).

In the absence of the recorder and deputy recorder, the mayor should open the court and immediately adjourn it and all recognisances to a future day, and so from time to time (f).

The quarter sessions of a borough is a court of record (g).

Formerly, there was a property qualification for a justice of the peace, but this was removed by the Justices of the Peace Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 16). This Act only requires the justice to be of full age and to reside within the county or within seven miles thereof (s. 2). See, further, title MAGISTRATES.

(t) Apparently there are now no boroughs having any jurisdiction, except those under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), except the City of London. The Municipal Corporations Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 18), destroyed all the boroughs reported on, which were not within the Act of 1882. Hemel Hempstead, which seems to have escaped the notice of the commissioners on whose report the Act of 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76) was founded, obtained a new charter in 1898.

SUB-SECT. 2.—*Jurisdiction.*SECT. 2.
Quarter
Sessions.(1) Criminal

170. The criminal jurisdiction of quarter sessions is both original and appellate. The original jurisdiction is to hear and determine at quarter sessions or any adjournment thereof, or at general sessions, an indictment, information or presentment for any offence committed within the county, or justiceable therein, with certain exceptions (h).

Original
criminal
jurisdiction
of quarter

The court has also jurisdiction to sentence incorrigible rogues who are sent from courts of petty sessions (i).

171. The appellate jurisdiction lies from courts of summary jurisdiction, and arises where it is given by some particular statute, and from a conviction and sentence ordering imprisonment without the option of a fine (k), except where the conviction is under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (l). There is no appeal where a person has pleaded guilty or has elected to be tried summarily for an indictable offence (m).

Appellate
criminal
jurisdiction.

The criminal jurisdiction of borough quarter sessions is co-extensive with that of county quarter sessions (n).

(2) Civil.

172. The present original civil jurisdiction of quarter sessions is now restricted (b) to the following matters: (1) Licensing—the refusal of an existing licence, on any ground other than that the licensed premises have been ill-conducted or are structurally deficient or unsuitable, or on grounds connected with the character or fitness of the proposed licensee, or on the ground that the renewal would be void (c), to impose a rate of charges on licences for the purpose of compensation for licences absorbed (d), to confirm new licences and any other powers of the former county licensing committee, to attach conditions to the grant of a licence, or to grant a licence for a term of years (e). This jurisdiction belongs to county quarter sessions, but in the case of county boroughs is exercisable by the whole body of the justices acting in and for the borough (f). (2) Highways—orders for diverting or closing highways made on the view and certificate of justices not appealed against (g). (3) Prisons—to appoint a visiting committee of civil jurisdiction.

173. The appellate civil jurisdiction is extensive. The most usual subjects of appeals are bastardy orders (n), rating appeals (o), settlement of paupers and other poor law matters (p), appeals from orders to divert or close highways (q), refusal to renew or transfer a licence (a), and against the appointment of overseers (b)

SECT. 3 —Special Sessions.

sessions.

174 Special sessions are meetings of justices convened for the purpose of executing some statutory authority, which is exercisable by justices out of quarter sessions (c). Special sessions are held for special sessional divisions, which are fixed and may be altered from time to time by quarter sessions (d). Notice of the special sessions must be given to all the justices who are usually resident or acting as such within the boundaries of the division (e)

In some cases the times for holding special sessions for particular purposes are prescribed by statute. Special sessions for appointing overseers in urban parishes must be held on 25th March, or within fourteen days after (f), licensing (or brewster) sessions must be held within the first fourteen days of February, and every adjournment

Sessions.

Special sessions may not be held on premises licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors (i).

There is no general statutory power to adjourn special sessions (except the general annual licensing meeting), but the hearing of any matter may be adjourned. Two justices must be present to constitute special sessions

175 The jurisdiction of special sessions is entirely statutory It includes highway purposes (h) and appointment of surveyors of highways (l), rating appeals (m), the general annual licensing meeting (n) (which also grants billiard licences) (o), sessions for the transfer of licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors (p) and for billiards (q), and the appointment of overseers in urban parishes (r).

Jurisdiction

In boroughs having a separate commission of the peace there is also jurisdiction to grant licences for stage plays (s)

SECT. 4 — Courts of Gaol Delivery and Oyer and Terminer

176 Courts of gaol delivery and oyer and terminer are held at the assizes when criminal business is taken (t) These courts are now part of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice (a).

The court sits under a general commission of gaol delivery and oyer and terminer, and has power and jurisdiction to proceed on the commission until it is renewed (d). The court is a branch of the High Court of Justice (e).

SUB-SECT 2.—Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction 178. The jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court extends over all treasons, murders, felonies, and misdemeanours committed within the city of London and county of Middlesex (f) and the county of London (g), and also so much of the county of Essex as is within the parishes of Barking, East Ham, West Ham, Little Ilford, Low Layton, Walthamstow, Wanstead St Mary, Woodford and Chingford, the hamlet of Mottingham, in the county of Kent, and so much of the county of Surrey as is within the parishes of Barnes, Merton, Mortlake, Wimbledon, Kew and Richmond (h). This district is to be taken as one county for the purpose of venue, which is to be laid as "Central Criminal Court to wit" (i)

His Majesty has power by Order in Council to extend the district of the Central Criminal Court in the months of November, December and January (k), and March, April and May (l), to any neighbouring county or part of a county mentioned in the order

Offences committed on the high seas 179 The Central Criminal Court has also jurisdiction to hear and determine any offences committed or alleged to be committed on the high seas or elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England (m), and also murders or manslaughters of persons subject to military law alleged to be committed by persons subject to such law (n).

Special jurisdiction 180 If the King's Bench Division make an order to that effect, the Central Criminal Court is to try any particular offence committed outside the jurisdiction of the court, whether the indictment

(c) The Secretaries of State and the Attorney- and Solicitor- General were included in the commissions. Sentences of death had to be reported to the King until the Central Criminal Court Act, 1837 (7 Will 4 & 1 Vict. c. 77). Under a charter of Henry I the citizens of London were empowered to have their own justices to hold pleas of the Crown, and no citizen could be impleaded on a plea of the Crown except in the City Court of Record (Pulling's Laws and Customs of London, 209, note). Under the Charter of Edward III. (1327) the mayor was constituted a justice of gaol delivery.

SECT. 4.
The Central
Criminal
Court.

The court has also jurisdiction to try indictments under the Corrupt Practices Act, 1883 (p), which have been instituted in or removed into the High Court, if, on the suggestion of the Attorney-General, the High Court shall so order (q).

181. The jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court has in practice superseded the criminal jurisdiction of the quarter sessions for the city of London and of those for the borough of Southwark, and all indictments found in the city and borough are tried at the Old Bailey (r)

sessions.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Judges.

182 The persons to be named in the commission are the Lord Mayor of the city of London, the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, all the judges of the King's Bench Division, the Dean of the Arches, the aldermen of the city of London, the Recorder, the Common Serjeant, the judges of the City of London Court (a), and any person who has been Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or a judge of the King's Bench Division, together with such others as His Majesty shall name therein (b).

missioners.

183 In practice the Recorder and Common Serjeant sit as judges of the court, assisted, if necessary, by one or both of the judges of the City of London Court. During the sittings a judge of the King's Bench Division, according to a rota, attends to try charges of murder and other serious crimes. The lord mayor, although in theory the first commissioner, takes no part in the proceedings, but the lord mayor or one of the aldermen must be in the building to form a quorum when only one judicial commissioner is sitting (c).

The judges.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Sittings.

184 The court is directed to sit at least twelve times in the year (and oftener if need be) (d), at times to be directed by four or more of the judges of the High Court (e). In practice there are twelve sessions. The court does not sit in the month of August. The sessions usually begin on a Tuesday, but sometimes on a Monday.

Sittings.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Officers

185. The officers of the Central Criminal Court are the clerk of the court, with a deputy, who is also the first clerk of arraigns, a second and third clerk of arraigns, a clerk of indictments, with an assistant, and a staff of clerks. The duties of these officers are similar to those of the clerks of assize, clerks of assizes etc on the circuits (f)

SECT. 6.—The Court of the Admiral of England.

Jurisdiction
of the
Admiral of England

186 The territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the Admiral of England are the seas or any other haven, river, or creek or place, where the admiral or admirals have or pretend to have power, authority or jurisdiction (g). But places within the bodies of counties as well by land as by water are excluded, except as to homicide or mayhem done in great ships, being and hovering in the main stream of great rivers only beneath the bridges of the same rivers nigh to the sea, and in none other places of the same rivers (h). In some old printed copies of the statutes the word "pointz" (i.e., points) occurs instead of "ponts" (bridges), but ponts appears to be the correct reading (i).

The sole jurisdiction to try treasons, piracies, felonies, robberies, murders, confederacies, and other offences committed on the high seas or elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the Admiral of England was formerly exercised under a commission under the Great Seal directed to the Admiral, his deputies and others, empowering them to try the same according to the common law as if they had been committed within the realm (k). In the case of the Cinque Ports, however, the commission was to be directed to the lord warden (l).

Concurrent jurisdiction, however, was given in 1835 (m) to the Central Criminal Court (n), and in 1844 to the courts of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery (o). Since the passing of those Acts no admiralty sessions have been held (p).

SECT 7 —Special Commissions

Special
commissions

187 In case a speedy trial of certain offences is necessary the Crown may issue a special commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery to particular judges of the King's Bench Division to hear and determine the trial of such offences. In the case of extortion and other misdemeanour being charged against the Governor-General of India, the Lieutenant-Governor, the chief or other justices of the High Courts and other public officers in India, the trial may be had before a special commission consisting of four peers chosen by lot, after thirteen challenges have been exhausted, from a list of twenty-six peers chosen by the House at the commencement of each session, and six members of the House of Commons, chosen by lot after twenty challenges are exhausted, from a list of forty

SECT 8 — The Court of Criminal Appeal.

SUB-SECT 1 — Constitution and Jurisdiction

189. The Court of Criminal Appeal was constituted in 1907 (x) as a superior court of record (y), and superseded the former Court of Crown Cases Reserved (a) and the proceedings in the King's Bench Division on writs of error (b) from courts of assize or from the Central Criminal Court

Court of Criminal
Appeal

The Court has jurisdiction to entertain appeals by persons convicted on indictments, criminal informations, coroners' inquisitions, and by persons dealt with at quarter sessions under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c), as incorrigible rogues (d) — (1) on any ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone, (2) by leave of the court or on a certificate from the judge who tried the case on any ground of appeal which involves a question of fact alone, or a question of mixed fact and law, or any other ground which appears to the court to be sufficient, (3) with the leave of the Court of Criminal Appeal against the sentence passed on conviction, unless the sentence is one fixed by law (d)

The court has the same power to deal with a recommendation for an expulsion order against an alien as it has with sentences, and also power to make such recommendations (e)

Such a point of law was argued before a court consisting of five or more judges of the High Court, of whom the Lord Chief Justice was to be one (except in case of his being prevented by illness or otherwise from attending (Judicature Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 68), s 15)

SECT. 2.
The Court
of Criminal
Appeal

The court has not jurisdiction to deal with convictions on indictments at common law for the non-repair or obstruction of highways (f), nor with convictions of peers or peeresses, or other persons claiming the privilege of peerage convicted of any offence not now lawfully triable by a court of assize (g). On an appeal the court has no jurisdiction to order a new trial (h), but if a judge should reserve a case for the opinion of the court under the jurisdiction transferred from the Court of Crown Cases Reserved, the court may possibly have power to grant a venire de novo (i).

SUB-SECT. 2 —Judges andittings.

Constitution
of the
court

190. The Lord Chief Justice of England and all the puisne judges of the King's Bench Division are the judges of the court (k)

The court as duly constituted, consists of not less than three judges and of an uneven number of judges. The court, if the Lord Chief Justice so directs, may sit in two or more divisions (l). The court sits in London, except when the Lord Chief Justice gives a special direction that it shall sit elsewhere (l). The Lord Chief Justice, or in his absence the senior judge, presides (m). The determination of appeals is by the majority of the judges sitting (n).

There is only one judgment, pronounced by the president or such other member of the court hearing the case as the president directs, except in the case of questions of law where, in the opinion of the court, it is convenient that separate judgments should be pronounced (o).

The jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division to grant a venire de novo on a rule mis does not seem to be affected by the Act.

(k) By the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s. 1 (1), eight judges of the King's Bench Division appointed by the Lord Chief Justice with the consent of the Lord Chancellor, for such period as he thinks desirable in each case, were to be judges of the court, but by the Criminal Appeal (Amendment) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 46), s 1, all the judges of the King's Bench Division were substituted.

(o) Ibid, s. 1 (5).

(p) Ibid, s 18 (1). Rules of court have been made under this power as follows.—Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, dated 17th March, 1908 (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1908, No 227, L 6), Additional Rules, dated 27th March, 1908 (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1908, 277, L 10). The rules deal with. Interpretation and forms, rr 1—3, notices of appeal, r 4, shorthand writers and transcript of notes, r 5, certificate of judge under s. 3, r 6, appeals where a fine only has been inflicted, r 7, custody of exhibits used at a trial, r 8; orders of restitution, rr. 9—12, certificates of conviction, r 13, notes and reports of assistance of a committee (g). In case the rules affect the governor or other officer of a prison, or any officer having the custody of an appellant, they must also be approved by the Secretary of State. The rules may regulate generally the practice and procedure of the court and the officers of any court before whom an appellant has been convicted (a). Rules are to be laid before Parliament forthwith, and if either House within the next thirty days on which the House has sat presents an address praying that the rule may be annulled, His Majesty in Council may annul the rule, without prejudice, however, to the validity of anything previously done thereunder (b).

SECT. 8.
The Court
of Criminal
Appeal.

192 In cases where the grounds of appeal involve a question of law only, the court may direct that a case be stated (c) in the same manner as was directed by the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (d). If the judge at the trial consents to state a case for the opinion of the court, the procedure under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (e), will be followed. The court has power to hear a case summarily if the registrar is of opinion that the notice of appeal on grounds of law alone does not show any substantial ground of appeal. In such a case, if the court considers that the appeal is frivolous or vexatious, and can be determined without adjourning it for a full hearing, the appeal may be dismissed summarily (f).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Officers.

193. The master of the Crown Office is registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal (g).

The duties of the registrar are to take the necessary steps for

On the occurrence of a vacancy the registrar was to be appointed by the Lord Chief Justice from among the masters of the Supreme Court (King's Bench Division), but by s. 2 of the Criminal Appeal (Amendment) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c. 46), the master of the Crown Office was substituted.

The registrar is to be provided with such additional staff (if any) as the Lord Chancellor with the concurrence of the Treasury may determine (i).

Part VII.—Courts having Jurisdiction in Lunacy.

SECT 1—In General

The King as
*parens
patriæ.*

194 The Statute De Prærogativa Regis (k), which is declaratory of the common law, declares that the care and custody of the estates and persons of lunatics and idiots is vested in the King. This authority is delegated by royal warrant under the sign manual (l) to the Lord High Chancellor in his capacity as Keeper of the Great Seal.

Transfer of
jurisdiction

195 The former Lords Justices of Appeal in Chancery (m) had, when acting together, all the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor (n). Subsequently this jurisdiction was conferred on them when acting separately (o). This jurisdiction was transferred on the constitution of the Supreme Court (p) to such judge or judges of the High Court of Justice as might be intrusted under the sign manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of lunatics and idiots. This jurisdiction of the judge so intrusted is separate from his jurisdiction as a member of the High Court, as the Judicature Act, 1875 (g), expressly provides that this jurisdiction in lunacy shall not be transferred to or vested in the High Court (r).

SECT. 1.
In General.

SECT. 2—The Lord Chancellor

196 Besides the statutory jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor (or other person to whom such a warrant might be directed), the Lord Chancellor appears to exercise an extensive jurisdiction by virtue of his general power as Keeper of the King's Conscience (s). This authority arises on the grant of the custody of the person and estate of a lunatic, but the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor is not usually exercised at the present time, and recourse is had instead to that of the judge in lunacy. Petitions, however, are addressed to the Lord Chancellor. There is an appeal from orders in lunacy made by the Lord Chancellor to the Court of Appeal (t) and thence to the House of Lords (a).

The Lord Chancellor.

197 The Lord Chancellor issues a general commission of inquiry to the masters in lunacy (b), and has power to issue a commission specially to any person or persons alone or in addition to the masters in lunacy (c). The Lord Chancellor may make rules for carrying the Lunacy Acts into effect and as to percentages and fees (d).

SECT. 3—The Judge in Lunacy.

198 The jurisdiction of the judge in lunacy may be exercised either by the Lord Chancellor or by any one or more of such judges of the Supreme Court as may be intrusted under the sign manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of lunatics (e). The Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal (f) are the judges who are actually so intrusted.

Majesty's forces and military stores. In such a case, the jurisdiction of courts-martial extends over all persons resorting to this territory (not being in the military or naval service of an independent Sovereign (u)). This extends to the case of one of His Majesty's ships being at a place inhabited by savages, where no law prevails, and where no redress for outrage can be obtained from any Government, or in any tribunal (x). In the case of an insurrection, similar powers may arise during the continuance of the necessity (y).

Part IX.—Miscellaneous Maritime Courts.

224 In addition to the Admiralty jurisdiction exercised by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (a), the Supreme Court of Judicature (b) and other courts already referred to in this article, there are various courts exercising maritime jurisdiction which have been or will be described in other articles, such as the Cinque Ports Court of Admiralty (c), the County Courts (d), the Liverpool Court of Passage (e), the Cinque Ports Salvage Commissioners (f), various Colonial Courts of Admiralty (g), Prize Courts (h), and it is not thought necessary to make further reference to these.

SECT. 1—Local Courts of Admiralty

225 Many of the seaport boroughs had in their charters a grant of a court of Admiralty (i), but in 1835 all local courts, except that of the Cinque Ports, were deprived of any Admiralty jurisdiction they might have (k). Certain titular and honorific rights, however, still appear to survive. For instance, the mayor of Southampton has a silver oar as insigne of a titular admiralty, and is entitled to receive the first visit from foreign men-of-war visiting the port, and the mayors of some other ports have a similar privilege.

(i) Some maritime towns had from a very early period courts of the seaport, which administered the law maritime. Disputes as to jurisdiction arose between the admiral's court and these courts, which led to two statutes ((1888) 13 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 5; (1890) 15 Ric. 2, st. 2, c. 3) defining and restricting the jurisdiction of the admiral (Carter, History of English Legal Institutions, 1st ed., p. 168).

SECT 2—Courts of the Vice-Admirals of the Coast

226 The sea coast of England and Wales is divided into nineteen districts, for each of which a vice-admiral of the coast can be appointed (l) Vice-admirals of the coast represent the Lord High Admiral (or the Lords Commissioners for executing that office) in his capacity so far as it is not concerned with the navy. They are appointed by letters patent under the Great Seal, and the appointment is durante bene placito (m) The jurisdiction extends up to high-water mark and to the first bridges towards the sea on rivers, and is exercisable by a judge (a) The patent of the vice-admiral empowers him to appoint his own officers, excepting, however, the judge, registrar, and marshal of his vice-admiralty court These excepted officers are appointed by letters patent, but there are none in existence at the present time, and, consequently, although the jurisdiction of these courts of vice-admiralty over causes of action arising in the jurisdiction has never been abolished by statute, there is now no means of executing it The jurisdiction as to wreck was, however, taken away by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (b)

(m) The form of patent is printed in Baker, Vice-Admiral of the Coast, pp 50 et seq, where the jurisdiction exercised by the court is stated

(a) By an order of a committee of the Lords and Commons, 1635, the judge was to be a discreet and learned man in the civil laws dwelling or resorting within the circuit of his office, or for want of a civilian one learned in the common laws of the realm dwelling within the same circuit In 1663 the Duke of York (afterwards James II), the then Lord High Admiral, issued instructions to the judge of the Court of Admiralty and to the vice-admirals, by which the powers and duties of those officers were regulated Under these the whole of the judicial powers was directed to be exercised by the judge, but the levying and receiving the perquisites of the office or droits of Admiralty remained with the vice-admirals These instructions did not apparently interfere with the jurisdiction of the judges of the Vice-Admiralty Courts, as these judges continued to be appointed (Encyclopædia Britannica, Vol I, pp 159, 160) The patents confer no jurisdiction in prize matters See Baker, Vice-Admiral of the Coast, p 69

they are liable to be condemned by British tribunals, are amenable to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty (d), the Colonial Courts of Admiralty (e), and the Vice-Admiralty Courts, the jurisdiction of which is by their commissions limited in matters relating to the slave trade (f)

In certain cases slave trade treaties and conventions contain provisions for the appointment of mixed courts or commissions; in such case His Majesty has power to appoint such commissioners, judges, arbitrators, secretary, registrar and other officers, as are mentioned in such provisions (g)

SECT. 4—Courts of Survey.

228. A court of survey for a port or district consists of a judge with two assessors. The judge is either a wreck commissioner, a stipendiary or metropolitan police magistrate, a judge of county courts, or other fit person approved by the Home Secretary. But in any special case the Board of Trade may appoint a wreck commissioner to be the judge. The assessors are persons of nautical, engineering, or other special skill and experience, one appointed by the Board of Trade, and the other summoned by the registrar of the court out of a list nominated by the local marine board, or if there is none, by a body of local shipowners or merchants approved by the Home Secretary, or if there is no such list, appointed by the judge (h)

Survey

229 Courts of survey have jurisdiction to hear appeals by the owners of ships detained by the Board of Trade as unsafe or unseaworthy (i), or from a declaration of survey of a passenger steamer (k), or by the owner of an emigrant ship from the refusal by an emigration officer of a certificate for clearance (l)

SECT. 5—Formal Investigation of Shipping Casualties.

230 The investigation is held either by a court of summary jurisdiction or by a wreck commissioner, according to the direction of the Board of Trade. If a stipendiary magistrate is a member of a local marine board of any place, a formal investigation at that place must be held before him if he happens to be present (m). If the investigation involves or appears likely to involve any question as to the cancellation or suspension of the certificate of a master, mate, or engineer, the court must be held with the assistance of not less than two assessors having experience in the merchant service (a) chosen out of a list of persons approved for three years (b)

231 The court has jurisdiction to hear the evidence relating to a shipping casualty (c), or, if the Board of Trade think fit, loss of life from a fishing vessel's boat (d), and to make a report to the Board of Trade containing a full statement of the case and of the opinion of the court thereon, accompanied by such report of or extracts from the evidence, and such observations as the court think fit (e). The court has all the powers of a court of summary jurisdiction acting as a court in the exercise of their ordinary jurisdiction (f).

The court has power, if one of the assessors concurs in the finding, to cancel or suspend the certificate of a master, mate, or engineer, if the court finds that the loss or abandonment of, or serious damage to any ship, or loss of life has been caused by his wrongful act or default (g). This decision must be made in open court (h).

SECT 6—Naval Courts.

SUB-SECT 1—Constitution

Naval courts
on foreign station

232 A naval court can be summoned by any officer in command of any of His Majesty's ships on any foreign station, or in the absence of such officer by any consular officer (i) in cases where such a court has jurisdiction (k). A naval court consists of not more than five nor less than three members, of whom, if possible, one is a British naval officer not below the rank of lieutenant, one a consular officer, and one a master of a British merchant ship, and the rest are either British naval officers, masters of British merchant ships, or British merchants. The court may include the officer summoning it, but not the master or consignee of the ship to which the parties complaining or complained against belong (l).

SUB SECT 2.—Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction

233 The jurisdiction of a naval court arises (1) whenever a complaint is made to the summoning officer, which appears to him to require immediate investigation, by the master of any British ship, or by a certificated mate, or by any one or more of the seamen belonging to such ship, (2) whenever the interest of the owner of any British ship or of the cargo thereof appears to the summoning officer to require it, (3) whenever any British ship is wrecked, abandoned, or otherwise lost at or near the place where the summoning officer is, or whenever the crew or part of the crew of any British ship which has been wrecked, abandoned, or lost abroad, arrive at that place (m).

A naval court must hear the complaint or other matter brought before them, or investigate the cause of the wreck, abandonment or loss, in such a manner as to give every person against whom any complaint or charge is made an opportunity of making a defence. Naval courts have power to administer oaths, to summon parties and witnesses, and to compel their attendance and the production of documents (n).

234 Naval courts can exercise the following powers (1) If the court is unanimous that the safety of the ship or crew or the interest of the owner require it, it may remove the master, and, with the consent of the consignee of the ship, appoint another person to act in his stead, (2) where authorised by law (o), cancel or suspend the certificate of any master, mate, or engineer, (3) discharge a seaman from his ship, (4) order the whole or any part of the wages of a seaman so discharged to be forfeited either as compensation to the owner, or as a fine to be paid into the exchequer; (5) decide any questions as to wages, fines, or forfeiture arising between the parties, (6) direct that costs incurred in obtaining the imprisonment of any seaman or apprentice in any foreign port may be deducted from his wages, (7) send home for trial masters, seamen, and apprentices charged with offences against property or persons out of His Majesty's dominions, or with offences on the high seas (p); (8) punish a master or any of the crew of a British ship for any offence under the Act which is punishable on summary conviction, (9) order a survey of the ship, (10) deal with the costs, and order persons making frivolous or vexatious complaints to pay compensation for any loss or delay caused thereby Orders made by a naval court within its jurisdiction are conclusive of the rights of the parties (q), but sentences of imprisonment must be confirmed by the senior naval or consular officer present at the place

court

235 A naval court must make a report to the Board of Trade, containing (1) a statement of the proceedings, the order made, and a report of the evidence, (2) an account of the wages of any seaman or apprentice discharged from his ship by the court, (3) in case of an inquiry into a case of wreck or abandonment, a statement of the opinion of the court as to the cause of the casualty, together with any requisite remarks on the conduct of the master and crew (r)

The inquest is held openly and publicly (c) before a jury of twelve (d) which is returned and impanelled by the sheriff and sworn by the commissioner (e). The attendance of witnesses may be compelled by Crown Office subpoena (f). Any person claiming any title to the real property may be heard by himself, attorney, or counsel (g). The commissioner may discharge the jury and have a fresh jury returned and impanelled (h). In the case of witnesses who are unable to attend or are dead, affidavits and statutory declarations may be accepted (i). The commissioner may take the verdict of the majority of the jury (k). The inquisition must be in writing or print or both and under the hands and seals of the commissioner or commissioners present and of the jurors concurring (l). It should find of whom the land was held and any other material matter specified in the commission (m). The commission with the inquisition is returned into the Central Office of the Supreme Court and filed in the Crown Office (n). An award of melius inquirendum may be awarded on the fiat of the Attorney-General or by order of the Lord Chancellor (o). On a melius inquirendum the proceedings commence de novo in the same manner as before (p). The commission issues under the seal of the Duchy, and the proceedings are filed in the Chancery of Lancaster.

Part XI.—Forest Courts.

SECT 1.—In General

237 The Sovereign is possessed of certain forests (c), for the protection of which there are particular laws and officers. For the execution of the forest laws there are four courts appointed: the Attachment or Woodmote, also called the Forty Days' Court, (2) the Regard or Survey of Dogs, (3) the Swainmote, and (4) the Eyre or Justice Seat. The greater number of forests in England have been disafforested, but three (d) still remain. In these the forest laws (e) are to some extent in force, and the forest courts are still held, although many of their functions are obsolete (f). The jurisdiction of forest courts is of a private and special nature, confined to a particular spot, and instituted only to redress particular injuries and nuisances, namely, such as relate to the King's venison (g), to the vert (h), and to the covert, and no other trespasses are cognisable by these courts (i). Forest courts

The inquest can be held virtute officii by an escheator, but no such officers are now appointed in England, although in Ireland the title survives, e.g., escheator of Munster, which is used in respect of Irish members of Parliament in the same way as the office of steward of the Chiltern Hundreds, so as to vacate the seat in Parliament.

of Attach-

Court of attachments

SECT. 2—The Court of Attachments.

238 The Court of Attachments, Woodmote, or Forty Days' Court, should be held before the verderers (j) of the forest once in every forty days (k). Its jurisdiction is to inquire into all offences committed in the forest, whether against vert or venison (l).

Under its ancient jurisdiction this court inquires into and receives attachments and presentments of the foresters and keepers, and enrolls them for the purpose of presenting them to the swainmote. The court has no power to convict offenders or to proceed to judgment (m), except where the trespass is under the value of fourpence, in which case the verderers in the Court of Attachment have power to assess the fine, and cause the same to be levied to the use of the King, which must be entered on the roll (n).

All unlawful encroachments in forests may be inquired into by the verderers in the Court of Attachments, and the persons who made and continued them prosecuted in these courts, and fined by the verderers for every such offence in a sum not exceeding £20, to be recovered before a justice of the peace, and the encroachment may be ordered to be abated. The forest officers may present all encroachments to the court, which is empowered to fine them for neglect. If it is alleged by the defence that the place in question was beyond the limits of the forest, the verderers have no power to determine the cause, but must certify it to the Attorney-General. The right of the Crown to proceed by information or any other legal process is expressly preserved (o).

SECT. 3—The Court of Regard

Court of

239 The Court of Regard or Survey of Dogs was directed to be held every third year (p) by the Regarders (q) of the Forest to see what dogs are expeditated (r) and what not. All dogs (s) not expeditated were to be presented and their owners amerced 8s. (a). This court, although the statute relating to it has not been repealed, has been obsolete for centuries (b).

Court of Swainmote.

240 The Court of Swainmote (c), Sweynmote, Swanimote, or Swainemote was held before the verderers as judges by the steward of the swainmote (d) three times in the year, and no more (e). All offences against vert (f) or venison (g) could be presented at the next swainmote before the foresters, verderers, regarders, agisters, and other ministers of the forest (h). All freeholders and all other honest and lawful men of the forest were bound to attend (i). The pleas in this court were called placita forestæ (h). The jurisdiction extended to offences committed in the purlieus (l) of the forest (m). After the court was opened the steward charged the jury to inquire into offences concerning—(1) gathering of acorns, (2) agistments to the hunt of deer, (3) assarts (n) newly made, (4) browse cut by warden or foresters, (5) burning heath, fern, or ling, (6) straightening of churchways, (7) crabs growing in the forest, (8) deer killed without warrant, (9) dogs, (10) extortion by forest officers, (11) commoning sheep at fawning time, (12) fences, (13) number of foresters; (14) foxes killed without warrant, (15) goats in the forest, (16) hares killed without warrant, (17) taking hawks' or herons' eggs; (18) unringed hogs, (19) unlicensed hogstyes, (20) hunting the King's deer within seven miles of the forest within forty days before or after the King's hunting, (21) inclosures, (22) meers (o), (23) mills, (24) mines, (25) nets, (26) pannage (p), (27) taking partridges' or pheasants' eggs, (28) pounding cattle out of the county, (29) hunting in the purlieus, (30) purprestures (q);

Swainmote.

(31) salteries, (32) sheep, (33) sheep-houses, (34) suits and services; (35) surcharge of the forest (r), (36) timber or trees cut down and other offences against vert, (37) waifs and strays, (38) straightening ways, (39) abuse of warrants to take vert or venison, (40) getting underwood, and (41) surcharges of the foresters and other ministers of the forest, and their oppressions brought upon the people (a).

The Court of Swainmote had only power to try offences, but not to give judgment or to award execution, for that was reserved to the Justice Seat (b). Swainmotes are still held, but they are mere formalities. Persons indicted in this court as common malefactors of the King's venison in the forest are liable to be outlawed (c).

SECT 5 — The Justice Seat.

The Justice Seat or Eyre

241 The Justice Seat or Eyre was the principal court of the forest and a court of record (d). It was held before the Chief Justice in Eyre or his deputy. On the abolition of the offices of Chief Justice and Justices in Eyre of His Majesty's Forests, Chases, Parks, and Wairrens, north and south of Trent respectively (e), all the powers and authorities belonging to the said offices were vested in the First Commissioner of Woods (f).

No Court of Justice Seat has been held since 1662, and it may be regarded as obsolete, but it may be revived by the King's writ.

At the Justice Seat all trespasses within the forest, all claims of franchises, liberties, or privileges, and all pleas and causes whatever therein arising were heard and determined (g).

The court had also jurisdiction to try presentments enrolled in the inferior courts of the forest, and to give judgment on convictions in the Court of Swainmote (h), and when judgment had been entered up a warrant was issued to the officers of the forest to apprehend the offenders (i).

SECT 6 — Judicial and other Officers of the Forests

The Justices
in Eyre

242 As the Chief Justice in Eyre was commonly a man of greater dignity than of knowledge in the laws of the forest, there were associated to him persons appointed by the King, who, together with the Chief Justice, were to determine all pleas of the forest,

A similar course apparently would have to be followed in case the First Commissioner of Woods should hold a court of justice-seat (k) There was also a steward of the swainmote (l).

Shut & Judicial and other
the Forests

243 Verderers (viridarii) (m) are judicial officers of the forest chosen in full county by the King's writ Their office is to observe and keep the laws of the forest, and to view, receive, and enrol all attachments and presentments of trespasses as to vert and venison, and to do equal right and justice to rich and poor There are usually four verderers in each of the King's forests (n)

Verderers.

244 Regarders are good and lawful men chosen by virtue of the King's writ and elected by the freeholders and sworn in by the sheriff (o) Their duties are to look after the woods and timber in the King's forest, to view and make strict inquiry in every bailiwick of the forest as to offences relating to vert and venison, to cause all forfeitures to be enrolled and to inquire of all wastes, purprestures, and assarts (p) of the forest, and to make a "regard" or perambulation of the forest before the holding of a court of judgment-seat (q) There should be twelve regarders in a forest

Regarders.

245 The ranger is an officer only appointed in the case of forests having known and acknowledged purlieus (r) His duties are confined to the purlieu, and consist in returning back into the forest deer coming thence, and inquiring into offences committed in the purlieu (s)

Rangers

The agister's (t) duties are to collect the dues for cattle etc pasturing in the forest, and to account to the judge at the next justice seat He is also to prevent trespasses being done by the cattle in the forest Four agisters should be appointed in each forest (a)

Agisters

The forester's duties were to preserve the vert and venison, to watch them, to attack offenders or trespassers in the forest, and to present all manner of offences in the forest at the next court of attachment or swainmote (b)

Foresters

The woodward's duties were to look after the woods, and to be present at all the courts of attachment and other courts of the forest (c).

PART XII,
Const of Chivalry

Court of Chivalry

Part XII.—Court of Chivalry.

246 The Court of Chivalry (d) takes cognisance of questions relating to the right to use armorial ensigns and bearings (e) An appeal lies to the King from the decisions of the Court of Chivalry in case of arms (f) In 1695 an attempt was made by the Court of Chivalry to prevent an undertaker painting unauthorised arms on coaches and palls, but prohibition went against this as not being causa armorum (g) The court fell into disuse, but in 1732 an attempt was made to revive it, and a court was held in the Painted Chamber, Westminster, on the 3rd and 30th of March, at which complaints were exhibited against various persons for using divers ensigns of honour contrary to the law of arms, but the court adjourned without deciding any case, and has never since been

(d) The Court of Chivalry was originally a court, held before the Lord High Constable of England and the Earl Marshal jointly, which had a civil jurisdiction relating to redressing injuries of honour and encroachment on armorial ensigns, precedence and distinctions of families, and a criminal jurisdiction over persons in military service, especially in foreign parts in time of war The criminal jurisdiction practically ceased on the attainder of Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham in 1521, when the office of Lord High Constable was forfeited to the Crown, and the remaining jurisdiction of the Lord High Constable, namely, that of presiding at a wager of battel, was exercised by a constable appointed pro hac vice This was a separate jurisdiction of the Lord High Constable, independent of the Court of Chivalry The last appointment for this purpose was in 1631 for the trial of the appeal of high treason by Donald, Lord Rea v Ramsay (1631) (3 State Tr 483), but the letters patent were revoked before the battel (by 59 Geo 3, c 46) This jurisdiction also ceased on the abolition of appeal of murder and wager of battel in 1819 After there ceased to be a Lord High Constable the Court of Chivalry was held before the Earl Marshal alone The Court of Chivalry in early times attempted to draw to itself pleas concerning the common law, but in 1381 (8 Ric 2, c 5) and again in 1389 (13 Ric. 2, c 2) statutes were passed to prevent this abuse

This court is called curia militaris (Rot Pat Hen 4), and the Marshal Court (Rot Parl 2 Hen 6, note 9, 4 Co Inst 123)

Comes stabuli, count or officer of the stable (New English Dictionary, Vol II, 871) "To the constable it appertaineth to have consuance of contracts and deeds of arms, and of war out of the realm, and also of things that touch war within the realm which cannot be determined or discussed by the common law" (4 Co Inst. 123) The only remaining exercises of the office of Lord High Constable are the ceremonial functions at a coronation, on which occasion an appointment is made pro hac vice

"Marshal," from the old Teutonic marhos, a horse, and skalkos, a servant (New English Dictionary, Vol VI, p 186), originally meant a farrier, but came in time to signify one of the chief functionaries of a royal household or court In 1189 the office was held by the Earl of Pembroke, and since then it has never been held by any under the dignity of an earl Thus the former title of Marshal of England became altered to that of Earl Marshal The office is hereditary The only remaining functions, except the ceremonial ones on the occasion of a coronation are the jurisdiction in the Court of Chivalry and the superintendence of the College of Arms, with the power to grant armorial bearings on behalf of the Crown

(e) Notably in the case of Scroop v Grosvenor (1388), Rot Let Olaus 12 Ric. 2, memb. 4, and a special roll (14 Ric 2) entitled "Rot. Process in curia militari in causa armorum int' Ric'm le Scroop, chevalier, et Robertum Grosvenor, chevalier."

Part XIII.—Court of Claims.

SECT 1—Constitution and Jurisdiction

247 On the occasion of a coronation the Sovereign issues a commission to certain high officers of state, peers, and judges to hear petitions and claims relating to services to be done and performed at the coronation in respect of the tenure of manors, lands, and hereditaments (m) held by the tenure of grand serjeantry (n) Claims in respect of services connected with the parts of the ceremonial performed in Westminster Hall and with the procession are excluded from the consideration of the commission when those ceremonials are omitted at the coronation (o)

Claims.

The court has power to decide on these claims, subject to the pleasure of the Sovereign, who may withdraw a claim from the commission, and transfer it to some other tribunal (p) The court may, however, refer any claim to the Sovereign's pleasure (q).

SECT 2—Procedure and Officers

248 In 1901 sixty years had elapsed since the last Court of Claims had been held, and very little evidence was forthcoming as to the procedure The court, however, proceeded to issue a notification (1) that petitioners need not appear in person if not summoned, (2) that petitioners might appear by counsel, solicitors, or agents, and (3) that, where there was no counterclaim, evidence that the petitioner represented a person whose claim was admitted on the last occasion was sufficient As to evidence, the strict rules of evidence were relaxed so far that the court did not inquire too strictly into whether documentary evidence was produced from

Part XIV.—Courts held by the Sheriff.

SECT 1—In General

Jurisdiction
of the sheriff

249 The jurisdiction of the sheriff in ancient times was both civil and criminal, and was exercised respectively in the sheriff's county court and the sheriff's tourn The latter of these, which was a court of record, has been abolished (s), while the former, which is not a court of record, need only be held for the purpose of an election, or for the due execution of some writ, or for some other specific purpose (t) The sheriff at one time had also power to hold pleas of the Crown and to take inquests whereby persons might be indicted, but this jurisdiction has been abolished (a)

SECT 2—Inquisitions on Writs of Elegit

Elegit.

250. By the Statute of Westminster II (b) a judgment creditor is entitled, instead of having a writ of fi fa, to have a writ directing the sheriff to deliver to him all the chattels (c) of the defendant (saving only his oxen and beasts of the plough) and the one half of his land until the payment of the sum due under the judgment The whole of the defendant's land is now liable to be delivered (d)

Inquisition

251 The execution of a writ of elegit necessitates an inquisition on receipt of the writ The sheriff proceeds at once to summon a jury of twelve to inquire as to what lands the judgment debtor holds in the county and what is their value The jury are charged and sworn to well and truly try of what lands, tenements, rectories, tithes, rents, and hereditaments, including lands and hereditaments of copyhold or customary tenure, the judgment debtor, or anyone in trust for him, is seised or over which he has a disposing power for his own benefit The proceedings are ex parte, and it is not necessary

(r) See Wollaston's Coronation Claims

(s) Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 55), s 18 (1) By s 40 (1) every court leet, court baron, law day, view of frankpledge, or other like court held at the passing of the Act (16th September, 1887), shall continue to be held on the accustomed days and places "The tourn is a court of record holden before the sheriff the ancient institution whereof was before Magna Carta, to hear and determine all felonies (death of man excepted) and common nuisances" (4 Co Inst 260) See, generally, title SHERIFFS AND BAILIFFS

(t) Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 55), s 18 (1), (2) The sheriff's county court had not jurisdiction in actions of debt or damage wherein more than 40s was claimed, nor in actions of trespass vi et armis (4 Co Inst 266). The sheriff's county court was in use until 1846, when the establishment of the statutory county courts caused it to fall into disuse

(a) Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 55), s 18 (3) See, however, stat (1354) 28 Edw 3, c 9, repealed by the Act of 1887 to give notice of them to the judgment debtor (c). As the inquisition is not conclusive against the judgment debtor, it is sufficient to give prima facie evidence of the title. The finding of the jury, whether in favour of the creditor or of the debtor, may be set aside by the court (f), and the sheriff may be directed to take a new inquisition (g). The sheriff or under-sheriff presides at the inquisition. The writ and inquisition must be returned and filed in the court from which the writ issued (h).

SECT. 2.
Inquisition on Writs of Elegit.

SECT. 3.—Inquiries as to Damages.

252 When in an action for unliquidated damages or for detention of goods, the plaintiff signs interlocutory judgment (i), in default of appearance, or of pleading, if the court or a judge does not order some other mode of ascertaining the damages or the value of the goods detained (k), the plaintiff can take out a writ of inquiry directed to the sheriff requiring him to summon a jury of twelve men (l) to assess the damages. In counties the jurymen are summoned from the ordinary jury book, and in cities and boroughs in the manner accustomed before 1825, that is, from the lists of burgesses (m). A special jury can only be had by order of the court from which the writ issues (n). It seems that there is no right to challenge jurymen (o). 'Ten days' notice of the time and place of the inquiry must be given to the defendant (p). The plaintiff is entitled to appear by his solicitor and by counsel, but notice of an intention to appear by counsel must be given to the defendant (q). The under-sheriff usually presides, but the sheriff may appoint a deputy for the purpose by a written authority under his seal of office (r). The proceedings at the inquisition are regulated by the Rules of the Supreme Court (s).

to damages

The defendant is only entitled to plead in mitigation of damages, and may not, under colour of seeking to reduce the damages, set up allegations which would be a defence or a bar to the action (t).

The finding of the jury can be set aside on the ground of misdirection (a) or of being contrary to the weight of evidence (b). The application for a new trial must be made to the Court of Appeal, and not to a divisional court (c).

If the sheriff does not make a return in due time, he will be compelled to do so by a rule (d). The sheriff may return that he and the jury are in doubt and pray the advice of the court (e). If the sheriff return that the jury found no damages, he is not responsible for the default of the jury (f).

254 This court, which is not a court of record, may be held before the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster or his deputy. It had jurisdiction concerning equities relating to lands holden of the King in right of the Duchy of Lancaster (i), whether situated within the county palatine of Lancaster or not. This jurisdiction was not exclusive (k). The proceedings were conducted as on the equity side in the old Courts of Exchequer and Chancery (l). On the 28th February, 1377 (a), a similar charter was granted for the term of his life to John, King of Castile and Leon, Duke of Lancaster. On 16th February, 1390 (b), Richard II. by charter granted these jura regalia to the Duke of Lancaster and his heirs male. Henry IV on his accession by a charter of the 14th October, 1399 (c), declared that these jura regalia were not to be changed by the King's accession and severed the Duchy from the Crown, the reason being that he had the Duchy by a sure and indefeasible title, but specially because his title to the Crown was not so assured, as the right to the Crown was in the heir of Lionel, Duke of Clarence, second son of Edward III (d). Since that time the county palatine of Lancaster has remained in the possession of the Sovereign as an inheritance separate from the Crown.

The county palatine of Lancaster under these charters has a court called the Court of Chancery of Lancaster, which is now regulated by a number of statutes, also an Attorney-General of the County Palatine and Duchy of Lancaster (e).

SUB-SECT 2.—Jurisdiction and Appeals.

256 The Court of Chancery of Lancaster has within the county palatine the like powers and jurisdiction as the High Court of Justice in its Chancery Division (f). The jurisdiction is thus unlimited in amount, although limited in area. The jurisdiction is concurrent with that of the High Court of Justice (g), and depends upon the existence within the jurisdiction of the persons, though not of the property, in question (h). If, however, any action is commenced in the palatine court which is not within the ancient chancery jurisdiction of the court(i), and would not if commenced in the High Court be assigned to the Chancery Division, it may be transferred to the High Court by the Chancery Court of Lancaster or the Court of Appeal(k)

(p) Until 1873 the County Palatine had also its own Court of Common Pleas, and special commissions of assize were issued in regard thereof (Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 99). The appointment of justices of the peace is not affected by this section, and they are still appointed by the Chancellor of the Duchy.

This court also possesses the summary jurisdiction of the Chancery Division(l), the statutory jurisdiction as to the property of infants and other persons under disability, power to administer assets(m), as well as jurisdiction under the Conveyancing Act 1881(n), the Trustee Act, 1893(o), and the Judicial Trustee Act, 1896(p), and as to money paid into court(q) under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845(r)

Jurisdiction

257 The court has power to direct that any question of fact arising in a suit or proceeding be tried by a special or common jury before the court itself(s), or to direct an issue to try any question of fact by a jury at the assizes(a)

Patents

258 The Chancery Court of Lancaster is not a court, nor is the Vice-Chancellor a judge, within the meaning of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907(b), the Vice-Chancellor has not power to grant a certificate that the validity of a patent came into question in an action for infringement so as to entitle the patentee to solicitor and client costs in a subsequent action for infringement unless the court otherwise directs(c)

Appeal

259 An appeal lies from this court to the Court of Appeal(d), and thence to the House of Lords(e)

SUB-SECT 3.—Judges

260 The Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine formerly exercised judicial functions. The appointment now, however, is of a political nature, and carries with it as a rule a seat in the Cabinet. The Vice-Chancellor, with the exception of certain interlocutory matters (f), performs all the judicial functions. He is appointed on the nomination of the Chancellor of the Duchy by letters patent from the Crown, which are expressed to be during pleasure, but in point of fact are quam diu se bene gesserit. Whenever the office of Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster becomes vacant, the Vice-Chancellor continues in office subject to the powers of the succeeding Chancellor (g).

SUB-SECT 4.—Procedure.

261 The Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine has statutory powers (h) to make rules of procedure subject to the approval of the authority for the time being empowered to make rules for the Supreme Court. Under these powers rules of procedure have been made (i) which assimilate the procedure of the Palatine Court to that of the High Court of Justice. Rules have also been made under the Settled Estates Act, 1877 (k), the Settled Land Act, 1882 (l), and under the Trustee Act, 1893 (m). There are also rules dealing with court fees (n), solicitors' costs (o), suitors' fund and fee fund accounts (p). The Chancellor of the Duchy has power to make rules regulating proceedings under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (q).

SUB-SECT 5 — Officers

Officers

262 There is an Attorney-General of the County Palatine and Duchy of Lancaster. There are three district registrars of the Liverpool, Manchester, and Preston districts respectively, with one assistant registrar at Liverpool and two at Manchester. The registrars are appointed by the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine, and hold office during his pleasure. The registrars in the Palatine Court perform the duties which the Masters of the Supreme Court (Chancery Division and Taxing Office), the Chancery Registrars, and the clerks in the Central Office perform in the High Court (c).

There is also a comptroller, who is appointed by the Chancellor. His duties are to check receipts and payments of suitors' moneys. The other officers are a seal-keeper and a cursitor (d).

263 Even before the Norman Conquest the bishops of Durham appear to have claimed palatinate or quasi-palatinate rights and jurisdiction. This prescriptive franchise was confirmed by charters of William the Conqueror, William Rufus, Henry I, and Henry II (e). In the reign of Edward I Anthony Bek, the then Bishop, was summoned to appear before the King's Justices under the Statute of "Quo Warranto" (f) to show how he held his franchise, and on his refusal to appear his franchise was seized into the King's hands in the name of distress. The Bishop appealed to the King and his council in Parliament, who held that he was entitled

Chancery
Court of the County
Palatine of Durham.

SUB-SECT 2—Jurisdiction

264. The jurisdiction of the court is unlimited in amount, but limited in area to the county palatine, which certainly includes the whole of the present county of Durham, and possibly other districts (i). The jurisdiction apart from statute is the old jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery within the county palatine. This is a jurisdiction in personam over the person within the area of jurisdiction, extending, in effect, to property wherever situate (k), but enforceable only, apart from statute, against the person, and not the property. This jurisdiction has been supplemented by statutes enabling orders of the Palatine Court to be enforced by making them orders of the High Court of Justice (l), empowering the court to deal with the property of infants and other persons under disability, the administration of assets (m), giving to it the summary

Jurisdiction.

(g) Durham (County Palatine) Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 19). The jurisdiction of the Chancery Court and the Court of Pleas was not altered by this Act. The jurisdiction of the Court of Pleas was transferred to the High Court by the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 66), s 16. See p 52, ante, and title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol VII, p 216.

(h) Palatine Court of Durham Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 47).

(i) Durham (County Palatine) Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 19), defines 'county of Durham' as "including the detached parts of Crickshire, Bedlingtonshire, Northumberland, Allertonshire, and Islandshire, and all other places heretofore within the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Durham, in right of the said county palatine." It has never been decided what the effect upon this is of the enactment of the Counties (Detached Parts) Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict c 61), annexing detached parts of counties to the county of which it forms part for the purposes of parliamentary elections. It is, however, suggested that an Act of this nature would not effect the jura regalia without express enactment. The Palatine Court of Durham Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 47), does not define the area over which the court has jurisdiction.

A commission for the punishment of offences may be issued (b), directed to the Lord Warden jointly with the admiral or admirals or his or their lieutenant, deputy or deputies (c). The Admiralty Court of the Cinque Ports (d) is also preserved (e).

Justices of the Cinque Ports.

271 Justices are appointed in the five ports and two ancient towns and such of their members as are boroughs, as in the case of other boroughs. The Crown has power to appoint justices having jurisdiction throughout the whole of the liberties of the Cinque Ports other than in the towns of Rye and Winchelsea and their corporate members, except for licensing purposes therein or matters which go before the general sessions of the Cinque Ports, ancient towns, or corporate members (f).

SECT. 2 – Salvage Commissioners

missioners

272 The Cinque Ports Salvage Commissioners consist of three or more persons from each of the Cinque Ports, two ancient towns, and their members appointed by the Lord Warden. They have jurisdiction to decide on all claims made by pilots, hoveliers, boutmen, and others for services rendered to ships, for carrying anchors or stores to ships, or preserving goods or merchandise wrecked, within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports (g). An appeal lies either to the Cinque Ports Admiralty Court or to the Admiralty Division of the High Court (h).

The Lord Warden, the Lieutenant of Dover Castle, the deputy wardens of the Cinque Ports, and the judge of the Cinque Ports Admiralty Court have the same jurisdiction (i).

Winchelsea and Rye were also added before the first year of King John (1199). The Lord Warden or Keeper of the Cinque Ports (guardianus quinque portuum) is also the Constable of Dover Castle. He is also admiral, and is exempt from the jurisdiction of the High Court in the exercise of its Admiralty jurisdiction (1 Co Inst 223). The boundaries of the jurisdiction of the Lord Warden are from the point called Red Cliff, westward of Seaford, in the county of Sussex, along the coast to Faversham, thence across the water to Shellness Point, in the Isle of Sheppey, thence to Smeeth Bacon, thence in a direct line to Brightlingsea, thence along the shore to St Oseyth, in Essex, thence along the shore to Maze Tower, and thence back to Red Cliff by way of an imaginary line in the sea (Cinque Ports Act, 1821 (1 & 2 Geo 4, c 76), s 18).

SECT. 8.—The Courts of Shepway, Brotherhood, and Guestling.

273 The Court of Shepway (h) was the ancient court in which the pleas of the Cinque Ports were heard and determined before the Lord Warden. Its only remaining function is to be summoned on the occasion of the installation of a new Lord Warden, and to have the patent of appointment read to the members of the court, and to receive his undertaking to maintain the franchises, liberties, and usances of the Cinque Ports (l).

Court of Shepway.

274 The Courts of Brotherhood (m) and Guestling (n) are courts which take cognisance of matters affecting the Cinque Ports and ancient towns, and the Ports and ancient towns and their members respectively.

Courts of Brotherhood and Guestling

The Court of Brotherhood is first held, and then there is a general meeting of the Brotherhood and Guestling. In the Court of Brotherhood the mayor, two jurats, and two freemen from each port or town sit, with the addition in the Court of Guestling of a similar deputation from each corporate member. The presiding officer is entitled the Speaker, and the office goes by rotation through the five Ports and two ancient towns (o). These courts are now usually only held on the occasion of a coronation to select the barons of the Cinque Ports who are to attend and to claim all the privileges of the Cinque Ports before the Court of Claims (p).

275 Besides the county courts (q), a large number of local courts of record have been established either by royal charter, or by local and personal Acts of Parliament or prescription. Forty-two of these courts were abolished in 1883 (r). The re-

The county courts are now regulated by the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 43), and the County Courts Act, 1903 (3 Edw 7, c 42), and the rules made thereunder. mainder still exist, and although the greater part of them have been in abeyance for many years (s), the corporations to which they were granted can still be compelled by mandamus to hold them and to entertain pleas (a), mere non-user does not take away the jurisdiction (b)

Extension of jurisdiction

276 In 1835 (c) there was conferred on such of these courts not regulated by any local Act of Parliament as had not previously possessed it, and in which a barrister of five years' standing acts as judge or assessor, jurisdiction to try actions of assumpsit, covenant, debt (whether by specialty or by simple contract), trespass, and trover, provided the sum or damages sought to be recovered does not exceed £20, and actions of ejectment wherein the rent of the premises possession whereof is sought to be recovered does not exceed £20, and upon which no fine is reserved or made payable

Excluding the jurisdiction

277 If the town council of a city or borough, or a majority of the ratepayers in any parish within the limits of which a court of local jurisdiction, other than a county court, is established, or into the limits of which city, borough, or parish the jurisdiction of such court shall extend, present a petition to His Majesty in Council that the jurisdiction of the local court be excluded in any causes whereof the county court has cognisance, then after two months' notice of the petition by public advertisement in such city, borough, or parish, and in some newspaper therein circulated, if no caveat be entered or counter-petition presented, an Order in Council may be made declaring the exclusion of the jurisdiction of such local court throughout the whole or any part of the district assigned or which may hereafter be assigned to such county court

If a caveat is issued or a counter-petition presented, the matter is to be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for report (d)

(s) There are reports in the Civil Judicial Statistics, 1868—1905, of twenty-four of these courts holding sittings

(a) R v Hastings Corporation (1822), 1 Dow & Ry (M C) 53 (in this case no court had been held for fifty-two years), R v Wells Corporation (1836), 4 Dowd 562 (in this case no court had been held for two hundred years, and it was alleged by the corporation that the form of procedure was unknown, but in each case a rule nisi was made absolute). In 1894 the Recorder of Worcester doubted whether he was the proper judge of the Worcester Court of Pleas, and refused to entertain a plea for breach of promise of marriage (96 L T Jo 267). A mandamus was applied for on the part of the plaintiff to compel the corporation of Worcester and their recorder to hold a court and entertain the plea. A rule nisi was granted on 13th March, 1894, and was directed to be served on the Attorney-General (Times Newspaper, 14th March, 1894). On 7th May, 1894, the rule nisi was made absolute after counsel for the plaintiff and the corporation and for the Attorney-General had been heard. No writ of mandamus was actually issued on the corporation, and the Recorder acted on the order.

No such Order can take effect in respect of any court not having a judge who is either a barrister or special pleader, or a solicitor who has practised as a solicitor for ten years (e). This power has never been exercised

SECT. I.
In General.
Alteration of district

There is also power by Order in Council to confer on these courts the same jurisdiction in equity and in Admiralty respectively as any county court now has, or may hereafter have (f), and power by Order in Council on the joint petition of the council of a borough and of the justices for the county in quarter sessions to extend the area of the jurisdiction of a borough civil court over any district adjacent to the borough within the jurisdiction of those quarter sessions (g). Neither of these powers has ever been exercised.

279 Inferior courts of record which have jurisdiction in equity, or at law and in equity, and in Admiralty respectively, have also had conferred upon them jurisdiction to entertain defences or counter-claims involving matter beyond their jurisdiction so far as they relate to the demand of the plaintiff and to the defence thereto, but no relief exceeding that which the court has jurisdiction to administer can be given to the defendant upon any such counterclaim. In case of such a counterclaim power is given to the High Court on the application of either party to order the transfer of the whole proceeding from the inferior court to the High Court (h).

Defences and counter-claims

The jurisdiction of these inferior courts to entertain counter-claims has been further extended (i) so as to enable an inferior court to hear and determine a counterclaim—(1) when the cause of action is outside the local limits of its jurisdiction, but is within the limits of the jurisdiction of any other inferior court of record (k), or (2) when the counterclaim involves more than one

In addition, in any case where the counterclaim involves matter beyond the jurisdiction of the court, the court may on such terms, if any, as it thinks just either adjourn the hearing or stay execution on the judgment to enable any party to apply to remove the proceedings into the High Court, or to enable the defendant to prosecute a cross action in any court of competent jurisdiction, and in default of any such application being made or action being brought the court shall after the expiration of the time limited have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole matter in controversy to the same extent as if the parties had consented thereto.

Judicature
Act, 1873,
s. 25.

280 The rules of law contained in s. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873 (l), as amended by s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875 (n), are applied to inferior courts (n) so far as the matters to which they refer are cognisable by such courts.

SUB-SECT. 2—Procedure and Power to make Rules

Procedure
and rules

281 The procedure in inferior courts of record is generally similar to that which existed in the superior courts of common law before the passing of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (o), with the exception that all actions are to be commenced by writ of summons (a). In some cases, however, rules regulating practice and procedure have been made by the judges, and approved by the judges of the superior courts. In other cases Orders in Council have applied to particular courts the provisions contained in the schedule to the Borough and Local Courts of Record Act, 1872 (b), and the provisions of other Acts.

All the powers under which these Orders were made (c) continued in force until 1883, when they were repealed, except the power of the Act of 1872, with the condition that where any repealed enactment had been extended to a local court by Order in Council such enactment should be construed as if it were contained in a local and personal Act relating to such court (d). A power was substituted to apply by Order in Council to any local court the provisions of the Judicature Acts and the Rules of the Supreme Court. This last power has only been exercised in the case of the Court of the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford, and in that case only as to appeals (e).

SECT. 1.
In General

The procedure varied in different courts, but it was generally based on either the old practice of the Court of King's Bench or on that of the Court of Common Pleas, that is to say, by attachment of the goods or person of the defendant to answer the claim of the plaintiff. But this procedure ceased in 1838, when arrest on mesne process was abolished (f). So that the procedure in those courts for which rules have not been made since that date would not appear to be very determinate. Probably, however, the next step after the service of the writ of summons, if the defendant does not enter an appearance, would be to proceed in the case of actions of debt or covenant by distress on the defendant's goods to compel an appearance (g), except in the case of those courts where judgment went in default of appearance. The object of compelling the defendant to appear is that in his absence the plaintiff's complaint cannot be heard (h). If appearance is entered, the ensuing steps would be declaration, plea, joinder of issue, and trial.

The judge of a borough civil court, if he is a barrister of five years' standing, has power to make rules of procedure to be approved by the recorder, if he is not judge of the court or does not act as the judge's deputy (i), and also by the Rule Committee of the Supreme Court (k).

There is also power by Order in Council to make rules (l) as to the appointment of deputy and assistant judges (m).

All conditions precedent to the former right to bring error are still conditions precedent to the right to appeal, and the objection must have been distinctly taken and brought to the attention of the judge before verdict. The objection also must be on a point which could have been the subject of a bill of exceptions (o).

But it is unnecessary to draw up a bill of exceptions (p) before verdict, or to have the same sealed by the judge, or to comply with any other requirements in the nature of procedure on which the right to bring error depended.

SUB SECT. 4 —Judges and Sittings.

Judges of local courts.

283 In very few of the charters granting these courts was there any provision made for the judge being a professional lawyer. But now where there is a recorder of the borough he is to act as judge, except where the court is regulated by a local Act of Parliament, or where at the time of the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (q), a barrister of five years' standing acted as judge or assessor of the court. In those cases where there was in 1835 a judge who was a barrister of five years' standing the appointment of the judge is by the corporation. In other cases the officer of the borough designated by the charter or by custom or the court is to be the judge, and power is given to the corporation to appoint such officer (r).

If an Order in Council (s) should be made enlarging the district of any inferior court of record the judge of which is not a barrister, or a special pleader, or a solicitor who has practised as such for ten years, the persons in whom the appointment is vested must within three months of the Order in Council, at a meeting called for the purpose, appoint a judge qualified as aforesaid, subject to His

In 1888 a parliamentary paper (Parliamentary Paper, 1888 (C. 187), continued by Parliamentary Paper, 1888 (C. 187. I.)) reported that in some cases it was unknown whether there was an appeal, and that in others there was none.

Every judge or assessor of a borough civil court other than the mayor holds (b) his office during good behaviour.

284. The recorder has power given to him to appoint a barrister of five years' standing to act as deputy for him at the present or next court or courts

Deputy judges

The Crown is empowered (c) by Order in Council to make rules as to the appointment of deputy judges and assistant judges. This power has been exercised by an Order in Council of 26th June, 1878 (d), which requires the appointment to be in writing, specifying the reasons for, the extent of, and the duration of the appointment, and that it shall be approved by the Lord Chancellor.

The authority having the appointment of a recorder has power to appoint a deputy if the recorder is unable to do so (e)

285. The Lord Chancellor is empowered to remove any judge of an inferior court of record for misbehaviour or incapacity (f).

Removal of judges

286. The courts are directed to be held for the trial of issues of fact and of law four times at least in each year, and with no greater interval than four months between two consecutive courts.

Sittings of courts

Subject to this provision, in cases where the recorder is the judge, the court is to be held when the recorder thinks fit or the Secretary of State for the Home Department directs (g)

SUB SECT. 5—Juries

287. All burgesses are, unless exempt or disqualified, qualified and liable to serve on juries for the trial of issues in the borough civil court. The clerk of the peace and the registrar of the borough civil court are directed to summon a sufficient number of persons qualified and liable if there is any cause to be tried at the borough civil court. No person shall be summoned to serve as a juror more than once a year (either at quarter sessions or in the civil court) until every person qualified and liable has been summoned. Non-attendance or wilful withdrawal is punishable by fine at the discretion of the court (h).

SUB SECT. 6—Officers and Fees

288. Corporations are under the obligation to appoint a registrar for the borough civil court, who is to be either the town clerk or a separate officer, and also other requisite officers (i).

The town council are empowered to fix fees subject to the approval of the Home Secretary. If fees are not so fixed, they are to be the same as those taken before 1895 (k).

SUB-SECT 7 — Removal of Causes

Certiorari.

289 The removal of causes from inferior courts of record into the High Court is effected by writ of certiorari issued to the inferior court of record (l), directing the record to be removed into the High Court (m). Certiorari always lies except where taken away by statute (n). It appears, therefore, that any action in an inferior court can be removed into the King's Bench Division at any stage before judgment (o). In addition to removal by certiorari, any proceedings in an inferior court in which the defence or a counter-claim involves matter beyond the jurisdiction of that court may be transferred to the High Court on an order of the High Court or a judge thereof, which may be made on the application of any party to the proceedings (p). Judgments of an inferior court may be removed into the High Court for the purpose of execution (q).

SECT 2 — Courts of Pie Poudre.

Pie poudre
courts

290 Courts of pie poudre (r) are in many cases granted to boroughs in their charter. These courts, which are courts of record, had jurisdiction to decide as to all manner of contracts, trespasses, covenants, and debts done within the time of fairs or markets and within their precincts. The jurisdiction only extends

(l) There were two modes by which causes in the inferior courts could be removed into the superior courts at Westminster. The first was by certiorari, and the second by a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, which lay when the defendant had been attached by his person or arrested on mesne process, and was directed to the officer in whose custody he was to bring him up and surrender him to the marshal of the King's Bench or the warden of the King's prison. It also lay to his bail for the same purpose. Since 1838, when mesne process in inferior courts was abolished by the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict c 110), this mode of removal by habeas corpus cum causa is no longer in use (see Archbold, Practice, 8th ed., p 1152).

(r) Pie poudre is usually derived from pes pulvericatus (dusty foot). Daanes Barrington, however, suggests that the true derivation is piet puldoraux (old French for "pedlar") (Observations on Statutes, 3rd ed., p 382. See also Gneist History of the English Constitution, Vol I, p 381, Carter, History of English Legal Institutions, 1st ed., p 256). As to these courts see stat. (1477-8) 17 Edw 4, c 2.

to questions arising at the particular fair or market in question, and not to those arising at any previous one. If it appears that the cause of action is not within the jurisdiction of the court of pie poudre, the plaintiff is remitted for his remedy to the ordinary courts. The law administered in the courts of pie poudre is the law merchant. The court of pie poudre is only authorised to sit on a day for which the fair or market is granted by the charter, and not on any other day on which the fair or market may actually be held (s). The procedure in courts of pie poudre is simple—pleas are begun without a writ, and an answer has to be made within a day, in many cases within an hour. Pleas may be adjourned from hour to hour and from day to day. Judgment may be deferred to the time of another fair or market (t). Courts of pie poudre are almost obsolete, except in the case of Bristol (u).

SECT. 3.—Court of the Clerk of the Markets

291. There was formerly an officer of the King's household called the Clerk of the Markets of the King's Household, who had jurisdiction to inquire whether weights and measures were according to the King's standard or no (a). The charters of many boroughs contain a grant of a court of the Clerk of the Markets (b). By such a grant the jurisdiction of the Clerk of the Markets of the King's Household is ousted, and the corporation has jurisdiction to inquire of weights and measures (c) in its court of the clerk of the markets.

The Clerk of the Markets is entitled to a fee for sealing weights and measures, but not merely for viewing them (d).

Particular

Bridport.

317. The Bridport Court of Record (h) has jurisdiction in all personal actions up to £20. The court is directed to be held once in three weeks before the mayor (i).

The process is by serviceable process, and the subsequent proceedings are as those in the superior courts of common law before 1852

The court has been in abeyance since 1787 No rules or tables of fees are in existence.

The corporation has a court leet (j), held before the mayor, the town clerk acting as clerk of the court (k).

(xxvi.) Bristol

Bristol
Tolzey Court.

318. The Tolzey Court of Bristol (l) has jurisdiction in all mixed and personal actions to any amount The court also possesses the power of foreign attachment. At the time of the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (m), a barrister of five years' standing was judge of the court, and consequently the recorder is not necessarily the judge At the present time, however, the recorder of Bristol is the judge of the court (n)

The corporation has also a court of pie poudre (o), which is held during fourteen days annually The holding of the Court of Tolzey is suspended during the holding of the Court of Pie Poudre, which court is held as a continuation of the Court of Tolzey

In 1871 an Order in Council was made applying certain provisions of the Common Law Procedure Acts, 1852 (p), 1854 (q), and 1860 (r), and of the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, 1855 (s), to the Bristol Courts of Tolzey and Pie Poudre (t) In 1873 another

- SECT. 5.
Particular Courts
- Order in Council (a) was made extending the whole of the provisions of the schedule to the Borough and Local Courts of Record Act, 1872 (b), to these courts. In 1878, however, rules were made by the then judge and confirmed by three judges of the High Court (c). These rules extended, with certain exceptions, all the provisions of the Judicature Acts, 1873 (d) and 1875 (e), and all rules made or which thereafter should be made thereunder, to the Bristol Courts of Tolzey and Pie Poudre. The effect of this appears to be to leave in force only that part of the Order in Council of 1871 which applied to these courts certain sections of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, relating to actions of ejectment (f)
- In 1883 another Order in Council was made (g) applying to these courts certain provisions of an Act of William IV (h) and of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (i), relating to interpleader. The Rules of the Supreme Court, however, appear to supersede these provisions except the provision in the Act of 1860 as to the finality of judgments (k)
- Officers The officers of the court are the registrar and two sergeants-at-mace appointed by the corporation. This court is still held (l)
- Bristol Mayor's Court 319 A charter of Edward III (m) confirmed to the corporation of Bristol a Mayor's Court, which is presumed to be analogous to the London Mayor's Court (n). This court, after a contest for jurisdiction with the Tolzey Court, fell into disuse about the seventeenth century
- Staple Court 320 There was also a court of the Staple (o), which, like the Mayor's Court, was superseded by the Tolzey Court (p)
- Frankpledge. A charter of Edward III recognised that the burgesses of Bristol from time immemorial had enjoyed the view of frankpledge, and confirmed the privilege (q)

There is also a court leet (f), to be held twice a year before the judge of the court of record (g)

This was an ancient Court of the Staple at Lincoln (h).

381. The Liskeard Court of Record (i) has jurisdiction in all actions, real, mixed, and personal, to any amount. The court is directed to be held before the mayor or his deputy, two capital burgesses (councillors), and before the chief steward (town clerk) if he be present There are no rules of the court or tables of fees in existence, and the procedure is unknown The court has been in abeyance for nearly a century

This court, which is still in full operation (s), is regulated by certain local and personal Acts (t), and also by two public and general Acts (a) The local Act of 1834 provided for the appointment by the corporation of an assistant barrister of seven years' standing In 1893 the title of this judicial officer was changed to the "Presiding Judge of the Court of Passage" (b), with the same power, jurisdiction, and authority in regard to causes in the Court of Passage (subject to rules of court) as is possessed by a judge of the High Court sitting in chambers or at nisi prius

In case of the death, sickness, or unavoidable absence of the presiding judge, the recorder of Liverpool may act in lieu of him (c)

These rules practically assimilate the procedure of the court to that of the King's Bench and Admiralty Divisions of the High Court (f), except that summary judgment under Ord 14 cannot be obtained against a defendant who is a domestic or menial servant, a labourer, a servant in husbandry, a journeyman, an artificer, a

384. Actions or matters may be removed from the Court of Passage by writ of certiorari or otherwise, if the High Court or a judge thereof deem it desirable, upon such terms as to payment of costs, giving security, or otherwise as the High Court or a judge thereof think fit to impose (i). There is a power to remit actions of tort (j) commenced in the High Court to the Court of Passage when the plaintiff has no visible means of paying the defendant's costs, and the plaintiff fails to give security for such costs, or to satisfy a judge of the High Court that his action is fit to be prosecuted in the High Court. Removal of actions.

Actions of contract commenced in the High Court where the amount in dispute does not exceed £100 may be remitted to the Court of Passage in a similar manner as it might have been remitted to the county court (k). Actions of contract commenced in the Court of Passage where the amount in dispute is less than £10 may be similarly transferred to the county court (l). An appeal upon any issue tried in the Court of Passage is allowed under the same circumstances and rules as in the case of a trial at nisi prius (m).

originally extended over all actions real, mixed, and personal, to any amount, but the extent of the business in time (f) caused the erection of the separate jurisdictions of the Mayor's Court and the sheriffs' courts for personal actions and ejectments, while the jurisdiction of the Court of Hustung was restricted to real and mixed actions (with the exception of ejectments), and to the action of replevin

The court was then divided into two divisions, the Court of Hustung for Pleas of Land (g) and the Court of Hustung for Common Pleas, which were directed to be held in alternate weeks. The recorder is the actual judge of the court, although, as in the case of the Mayor's Court (h), the lord mayor (or in his absence an alderman who has passed the chain) and sheriffs are technically the judges of the court.

Wills and deeds may also be enrolled in this court, but of late years very few have been so enrolled. The rolls of pleas of land commence 1273 and end 1724, while those of common pleas commence in 1272 and end 1506 (i).

391 The two ancient sheriffs' courts for the Poultry Compter and for the Giltspur Street Compter have never been formally abolished (k), and in 1901 the Court of Common Council appointed the existing judges of the City of London Court to be respectively judges of the Poultry and of the Giltspur Street Compters Sheriffs' Courts.

392 The court of equity held before the Lord Mayor was a species of court of review of the sheriffs' courts. A defendant after judgment might enter into recognisances to pay the debt or damages in case of affirmance, and to abide by such order as the Lord Mayor should make. The judge of the sheriffs' court attended with the record and his notes together with the recorder and the City Solicitor. After argument the Lord Mayor has authority to order that the plaintiff be debarred from recovering the debt or damages, or that the debt or damages shall be abridged, i.e., reduced, or that the defendant shall have time on giving security for payment, or that the judgment shall be suspended to allow the defendant to file a bill in equity for an injunction, or he may decline to interfere (l).

The Court of Quarter Sessions has in addition jurisdiction as to—(1) estreats, (2) examining and allowing the accounts of the City of London Trophy Tax, as a preliminary to the issue of a warrant for the raising of the tax (q), (3) expenses in cases dismissed and other small matters, (4) the assessment of compensation for lands taken under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act (r), (5) business with regard to forfeited recognisances, (6) poor law and rating appeals.

The jurisdiction is extended to actions of ejectment where the rent of the premises sought to be recovered does not exceed £20, and there is no fine (t). The court has long been in abeyance, and nothing appears to be known of its practice and procedure.

The charter also grants to the corporation a court of pie poudre (u).

(cxxxiv) Salford Hundred

(v) By Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c cxxx), which Act, after reciting that the Court of Record for the Hundred of Salford and the Court of Record for the Trial of Civil Actions within the City of Manchester had been found of great utility, and that their utility would be greatly increased by the amalgamation of the two courts and by the extension of the powers theretofore possessed by them, enacted that the two courts should be amalgamated, and the amalgamated court should be called 'The Court of Record for the Hundred of Salford, in the County of Lancaster.' It also recited that the Right Honourable William Philip, Earl of Sefton, and his ancestors had long held, enjoyed, and exercised the dignity and office of steward for the hundred or wapentake of Salford, in the County Palatine of Lancaster, and further enacted that Her Majesty's steward for the time being of the hundred or wapentake of Salford should be the high steward of the amalgamated court.

(w) See Hallet v Burt (1697), 5 Mod Rep 254. The Salford Hundred Court was one of the ancient Anglo-Saxon hundred courts, probably one of the oldest. Each hundred had its court, or "wapentac," "wapentake," "wapontake," so styled because the judge and suitors attended armed with their weapons (see also note (m), p 214, post). The hundred of Salford was also called in course of time the "Wapentake of Salfordshire." The jurisdiction of the court was unlimited in amount until the reign of Edward I, when by the statute of Gloucester (1278) its jurisdiction was reduced to 40s, equivalent to about £40 or £50 of our money now. That continued to be the extent of its jurisdiction until by 9 & 10 Vict c cxxvi (1846) it was raised to £50 over all the hundred except the borough of Manchester, and the court was constituted a "court of record for the hundred or wapentake of Salford, in the county of Lancaster."

(z) In 1833, by royal charter expressed in letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, the right had been granted to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Manchester to hold within the borough a court of record for the trial of civil actions before the mayor of the borough, and in 1853, by certain other letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, the borough of Manchester was constituted the city of Manchester, and the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Manchester a body politic and corporate by the name and style of "The Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of Manchester, in the County of Lancaster," and by other Acts of Parliament, and particularly by the Manchester Court of Record Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c 84), the powers and jurisdiction of the Court of Record of the City of Manchester were extended, and its practice and procedure simplified and otherwise improved.

The jurisdiction, however, has been cut down by being excluded in all cases within the boroughs of Oldham and Bury, and part of the borough of Bacup, in which the county court has jurisdiction (c) and in cases under £5 within the borough of Bolton in which the county court has jurisdiction (d), and in cases under £5 within the borough of Heywood in which the county court has jurisdiction (e), and in the like causes within the borough of Rochdale (f), and in cases under £10 within the borough of Middleton (g). The practice and procedure of the court is regulated by the Common Law Procedure Acts, 1852 (h) and 1854 (i). The provisions of the Summary Procedure Bills of Exchange Act, 1855 (k), have also been extended to this court (l).

If on the trial of an issue the judge grants leave, a rule to set aside a verdict or nonsuit and to enter a verdict, or to enter a nonsuit, or to arrest the judgment, or for judgment non obstante verdicto, may be moved before the King's Bench Division (m). All powers, authorities, jurisdictions, and privileges of inferior courts of record of which a barrister of five years' standing is the judge are granted to and vested in the Salford Hundred Court (n).

SECT. 5.
Particular
Courts

The judge
etc

442 The offices of the court are in the city of Manchester. The number of writs in the year average about 16,000, and the judge (who is appointed by the Lord Chancellor and must be a barrister-at-law of at least ten years' standing (o)) holds a court six times a year at the Manchester Assize Court for the trial of civil actions. The jury are twelve in number, and as the court has power to try certain actions which cannot be tried in the county courts, and as most of the cases tried are jury cases, which, in the densely populated district over which the court's jurisdiction extends, the local county courts could not conveniently try owing to the large amount of other county court work they have to cope with, the utility of the Salford Hundred Court of Record is as great as was contemplated by the legislature when the amalgamated court was constituted in 1868 (p).

The judge has power to hear applications for rules to show cause in arrest of judgment, or for judgment non obstante veredicto, or for repleader, or for a new trial, or for entering verdicts or nonsuits pending in the court within twenty-one days after trial, and whether the court be sitting or not, either within or without the hundred (q).

The officers of the court are the registrar and the head bailiff, together with clerks and criers (r).

There is a table of court fees dated 6th May, 1895. There are three scales, one for claims not exceeding £5, one for claims not exceeding £20, and the other for claims exceeding £20.

(cxxxv) Salisbury

443 By prescription the Bishop of Salisbury has a civil court in that city. The court has jurisdiction in mixed and personal actions up to any amount. It is doubtful whether the jurisdiction extended over the close as well as over the city, but since 1835 the jurisdiction extends over the whole of the borough (s). There is a recorder of Salisbury, who is, it would seem, judge of the court (t). The practice was similar to that of the Court of King's Bench before 1852. There was formerly a book of the practice of the court, but it had been lost before 1834. The costs are stated to be the same as those in the Court of Common Pleas before 1852. The court has been in abeyance since 1846, and no trial has taken place since 1816. The officer of the court is called the prothonotary, Salisbury

The corporation had a court of pie poudre (r), but this is now obsolete.

The charters also grant courts leet (s) and views of frankpledge to the corporation, which should be held separately for the three manors before mentioned (t)

Quarter sessions for the borough of Southwark are still held. The judges of the court are the lord mayor, the aldermen who have passed the chair, and the recorder, of whom the lord mayor or in his absence an alderman who has passed the chair, two other aldermen who have passed the chair, and the recorder must be present. The proceedings are now purely formal (a).

(cxlvi) Stannaries Court

Stannaries
Court.

454 The Court of the Stannaries of Cornwall and Devon originated by virtue of a privilege granted to the workers in the tin mines in those counties to sue and be sued only in their own courts (n). The courts, which were courts of record, were originally distinct for the several stannaries, but in 1836 were amalgamated into one Court of the Vice-Warden for all the Stannaries (o). Until the establishment of the modern county courts the tin-workers could not be sued except in the Stannaries Court in respect of matters arising within the stannaries, but after that event the county court of the district had a concurrent jurisdiction (p).

The Lord Warden of the Stannaries was appointed by the Duke of Cornwall, and he appointed a Vice-Warden before whom the court was held. An appeal lay from the Vice-Warden to the Lord Warden, but by the Judicature Act, 1873, all the judicial jurisdiction and powers of the Lord Warden were transferred to the Court of Appeal (q), and as from the 1st January, 1897, the Court of the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries ceased to exist, except as to then pending proceedings, and all the jurisdiction and powers of the court were vested in such of the county courts as the Lord Chancellor might by order direct (r). The county courts of Cornwall were appointed the courts to exercise the transferred jurisdiction and powers (s), and rules have been made for the purpose of regulating the procedure in cases brought under the stannaries jurisdiction (t).

The corporation have also a court of husting (h) for proceedings in lieu of fines and recoveries. This court fell into abeyance about the middle of the nineteenth century.

The charter also granted a court of pie poudre (i)

There are also a court of the Clerk of the Market (j), a court of Guildhall, and a court of Consequancy of the rivers Ouse, Humber, Wharfe, Derwent, Aire, and Don, both in the city and county of York and in the county of Lincoln (k). All these courts are to be held before the lord mayor.

There was an ancient Court of the Staple at York (l).

(m) Even prior to the Norman Conquest, besides the courts for the shire, there were also courts for the hundred or wapentake, and for the town or township (See F W Maitland, Justice and Police). The former of these, the hundredgemot, after the Conquest became the hundred court, and was at first held every month, then every fortnight and from 1234 A.D. once in three weeks (Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, Vol I, pp 543—547).

At first the whole body of suitors were the judges, but afterwards this jurisdiction was vested in twelve men, who might either hold their office by choice for the particular occasion, or for life, or by hereditary succession (Stubbs, Constitutional History of England, Vol I, p 102).

The hundred court had both criminal and civil jurisdiction, but the criminal jurisdiction came to be exercised by way of the sheriff's tourn (see p 118,

SECT 2—Manorial Courts.

SUB-SECT. 1—In General

SECT. 2.
Manorial
Courts.

482. The halimote, which was the court of the township in pre-Norman times, developed into the manorial courts, which were the court leet, the court baron, and the customary court of the manor(n). The halimote.

SUB-SECT 2—The Court Leet

483 The court leet, law day, or view of frankpledge (o), which exercised the criminal jurisdiction of the halimote, is a court of record (p) for the cognisance of criminal matters or pleas of the Crown, and necessarily belongs to the King, although a subject, usually the lord of a manor, may be and is entitled to the profits of the court (q) The power of holding the court and taking the profits thereof was a franchise appendant to manors, either by prescription or by a grant from the Crown under letters patent This court was held twice a year, that is, within a month after Easter and a month after Michaelmas It was originally held before the lord or his steward (r), but the usage is that it should be held before the steward The jurisdiction extended over such offences as were not felonies, and offenders were punishable by amerciaments, or by the pillory, stocks, cucking-stool, or tumbrell Court leet.

It is expressly enacted by statute that courts leet, courts baron, law days, views of frankpledge, or other like courts held on the 16th September, 1887, shall continue to be held on the days and in the places heretofore accustomed (s)

The jurisdiction has, however, fallen into complete disuse, having been superseded by the summary jurisdiction exercised by the justices of the peace (t).

484 The franchise of view of frankpledge was liable to be lost by non-user, or in consequence of the lord not having proper officers, or not possessing judicaria, such as the pillory, stocks etc. (u) View of

ante), which was abolished in 1887 (Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c 55), s 18 (4))

The civil jurisdiction of the hundred court was practically abolished in 1867 by the County Courts Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 142), s 28, which provided that no action which could be brought in a county court should thenceforth be commenced in a hundred court not being a court of record (as in the case of the Salford Hundred Court, see p 197, ante).

(n) See p 216, post As to courts baron, see Vinogradoff, The Growth of the Manor, pp 362 et seq

(r) It is said that in ancient times it was held before the bailiff of the lord (Ritson, Court Leet, p 6) As to place, see R. v Ilchester (Bailiff) (1824), 2 B & C 764.

SECT. 2.

Manorial
Courts.Borough
courts leet

485. In many cases manorial rights were vested in a borough, and thus, or by a separate royal grant, the corporation had the right to hold a court leet (a), which then became the appropriate court in which the mayor or portreeve and other officers were appointed (b).

SUB-SECT 3—The Court Baron

Court baron

486 The civil jurisdiction of the halimote was exercised by the court baron (c), which, like the court leet, was a franchise incident to a manor (d) either by prescription or grant by letters patent. The abolition of real actions in 1833 (e) destroyed the obsolete jurisdiction of these courts under the original writs directed to them (f). In 1867 their jurisdiction was abolished in all actions maintainable in a county court, except where they were courts of record (g). The effect of this legislation is to restrict their jurisdiction as courts for the trial of actions to such cases as are not within the jurisdiction of the county court, and in which under 40s. is claimed as debt or damages (h).

SUB-SECT 4—*The Customary Court*Customary
court.

487 The origin of this court is obscure. It apparently arose out of the absolute jurisdiction of the lord over his villeins. The customary court had for its suitors the copyholders and customary tenants of the manor (i). In case a reputed manor had not the two freeholders as tenants necessary to constitute the court baron, the right to hold a court for the copyholders and customary tenants still subsists (k).

There may also be a customary manor held of another manor by copy of court roll, with copyholders and a customary court for them (l). A court may be held for purely ministerial purposes, although no copyholders or customary tenants are present (m).

(a) See under the separate boroughs in Part XVII, sect 5, of this title, ante, for grants of courts leet.

(b) The Municipal Corporations Act, 1833 (46 & 47 Vict c 18), abolished a large number of unreformed corporations and the civil and criminal courts which they held by charter or prescription, but the Act expressly saved the courts leet of Over and Altrincham for the purpose of electing titular mayors. The court leet of the Precinct of the Savoy is still held, and exercises the jurisdiction over nuisances &c. See Carter, History of English Legal Institutions, p. 291.

(c) See the Court Baron, Selden Society Publications, Vol IV.

(d) A court baron is incident to a manor, and a manor cannot be without a court baron and suitors or freeholders, two at the least (Scroggs, Courts Leet and Courts Baron, 4th ed., p. 79).

(e) Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will 4, c 27).

(f) See title ACTION, Vol V, p 45.

(g) See note (m) on p 214, infra.

(h) These courts baron were (1) to adjust differences between lord and lord adjoining, (2) to keep the lord and tenant quiet, and to keep the tenant to enjoy, paying his rent and performing his services, and that the tenant should not wrong the lord by withdrawing his rent, custom, or services (ibid., p. 83). ### SUB-SECT. 5.—Courts of Ancient Domesne.

SECT. 2:
Manorial
Courts.

Courts of ancient demesne.

488 Those manors which were in the hands of Edward the Confessor or William the Conqueror, and are so expressed in Domesday Book, are called the ancient demesne of the Crown. All those who hold in socage of these manors are tenants in ancient demesne. The courts of these manors are called courts of ancient demesne. These courts are similar to courts baron, and, like them, they are not courts of record, and the suitors are the judges, and two suitors are necessary to the existence of the court (a).

Part XIX.—Judicial Commissioners.

SECT. 1.—The Railway and Canal Commission.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Constitution and Judges

Constitution
of the Railway and Canal Commission.

489. The Railway and Canal Commission was constituted in its present form in 1888 (o). It consists of two commissioners appointed by His Majesty on the recommendation of the President of the Board of Trade, one of whom is to be of experience in railway business (p), and three ex-officio commissioners, one each for England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively, being such judge of a superior court as shall be nominated, in the case of England, by the Lord Chancellor, of Scotland by the Lord President of the Court of Session, and of Ireland by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland. The ex-officio commissioners are not required to attend sittings of the Commission outside of that part of the United Kingdom for which they are nominated (q).

The appointed commissioners are paid such salary not exceeding £3000 a year as the President of the Board of Trade may, with the concurrence of the Treasury, appoint (r).

The presence of three commissioners is required for the hearing of any case. The ex-officio commissioner presides, whose opinion prevails on all points of law. If the ex-officio commissioner is unable to attend another judge may be nominated to sit for him, and similarly, if an appointed commissioner cannot attend, the President of the Board of Trade may nominate a temporary commissioner to hear any particular case (s). The Railway

Commission.

SECT. 2.—Land Tax Commission.

Land Tax
Commission

491. The Land Tax Commission consists of commissioners appointed by name by statutes passed from time to time in that behalf (d), with the addition of justices of the peace within their respective counties, ridings, divisions, districts (e), and boroughs (f). In the case of cities, boroughs, Cinque Ports, and towns corporate a commissioner must be qualified by being an inhabitant (g).

These commissioners, two of whom are a quorum (h), have power to hear and finally determine without appeal all questions and differences respecting the assessment and collection of land tax, on complaint of any person aggrieved (i).

If any commissioner is interested in any question brought before the commissioners he is disqualified and must retire till the remainder of the commissioners have given their decision (k). If he refuses to withdraw, the other commissioners have power to inflict upon him a fine not exceeding £20 (l), or a suit in the name of the Attorney-General may be brought in the High Court against him for a penalty of £50 (m).

SECT. 3.—Income Tax Commissioners.

492. There are two classes of Income Tax Commissioners namely, the Commissioners for the General Purposes of the Income Tax Acts and the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of those Acts. The first of these, called "the general commissioners" (n), are appointed by the Land Tax Commissioners from their own number (o) to act for the county or other district over which they have jurisdiction. The second, called the "special commissioners" (p), consist of the Inland Revenue Commissioners and such persons as are appointed by the Treasury (q).

(d) The latest statute is the Land Tax Commissioners Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 52). The land tax was imposed in 1689 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 3), and was at first annual, but was made perpetual by the Land Tax Act, 1798 (38 Geo. 3, c. 5). The Act of 1689 named the first commissioners.

Income Tax Commissioners The general commissioners have also jurisdiction to hear appeals from persons aggrieved by assessments for inhabited house duty (r).

A person aggrieved by an assessment under Schedule D of the Income Tax Acts may appeal either to the general commissioners or to the special commissioners, except in the case of exemption or relief on account of his income being less than £700 a year, in which case the appeal lies to the general commissioners only (s).

Claims for allowances in respect of the duties in Schedule A by colleges, public schools, hospitals, almshouses, literary institutions, and charities are to be made to the special commissioners (t), as also are claims for exemption from the duties in Schedule C (a).

The decisions both of the general (b) and special commissioners (c) are final, except when the appellant or the surveyor at once expresses his dissatisfaction with the decision as being erroneous in point of law, and within twenty-one days requires a case to be stated for the opinion of the High Court of Justice (d).

An appeal lies from the decision of the High Court to the Court of Appeal, and thence to the House of Lords (e).

SECT 4 — Commissioners of Sewers.

SUB-SECT 1 — Constitution

Commissioners of sewers.

493 Commissions of sewers are issued by way of Letters Patent under the Great Seal, from time to time as need requires, to such substantial and indifferent persons as are named by the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Treasurer, and the Lord Chief Justice (f). Commissions of sewers can also issue on recommendation of the Inclosure Commissioners to be obtained on petition of the proprietors after investigation by an inspector (g).

The Commissioners of Sewers are required to be sworn in the prescribed form (h), and are to forfeit £40 for every time they shall attempt to act if unsworn (i).

Commissions of sewers stand and continue in force for ten years, unless they are determined by the issue of a new commission or by a writ of supersedeas discharging such commission or commissions (k).

Commis-

Sewers.

494. The Commissioners of Sewers have a court, although the statutes do not in express terms grant a court. They are, however, said to be the King's justices (m), and the Court of King's Bench has held that they have a court of record (n). #### SUB-SECT 2 — Jurisdiction

495. The Commissioners of Sewers have jurisdiction to survey the walls, ditches, banks, gutters, sewers, goots, calces, bridges, streams, and other defences by the coasts of the sea, and marsh ground, and mills, milldams, floodgates, ponds, locks, hebbing weares, and other impediments, lets, and annoyances, and to cause the same to be corrected, repaired, amended, put down, or reformed as the case shall require after their wisdom and discretion (p). All walls, banks, culverts, and other defences whatever, whether natural or artificial, situate by the coasts of the sea, and all rivers, streams, sewers, and watercourses which are navigable or where the tide ebbs and flows, and all walls, banks, culverts, bridges, dams, floodgates, and other works erected in, upon, over, or adjoining such rivers etc., are within the jurisdiction of the commissioners, except ornamental works erected before 1833 and watercourses near or contiguous to houses or buildings, or in gardens, parks, avenues etc., in which cases the consent of the owner in writing is necessary to authorise the commissioners to exercise jurisdiction (q). They may also decree and ordain new works or alterations in old works, and may abandon old works and decree and ordain new works in lieu thereof (r); but no new works are to be made without the consent of the owners and occupiers of three fourth parts in value of the lands to be charged (s).

Jurisdiction.

The Commissioners of Sewers by themselves without a jury may survey the defences and ascertain the defects and what is necessary for repairing them and the cost thereof (t).

Presentments
by jury.

496 A jury may present (1) the erection of impediments, as floodgates, mills etc., (2) by whose default defects in the defences have arisen; (3) what persons are bound by custom, prescription, tenure, covenant, or otherwise to repair defects; (4) what grounds lie within the hurt or danger of waters, either within the surround by the sea or the inundation of the fresh waters, and to whom they belong, (5) what persons hold lands which are chargeable to new works, and the quantity of their lands, (6) amerciaments (a). The presentments of the jury must be made on evidence on oath before the commissioners in court and not upon information collected in pais without oath (b)

497. All orders and rates made by the Commissioners of Sewers without the presentment of a jury can be appealed against to quarter sessions, when the matter may be decided by the justices or by arbitration (c)

SECT 5—Board of Agriculture and Fisheries

commutation.

498 The jurisdiction under the Tithe Commutation Acts is exercised by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (d), and appears now to be restricted to altering the apportionment of tithe rentcharge in certain cases (1) between different lands of the same person at his desire and at his expense (e), (2) where lands charged with one rentcharge have become vested in several owners (f), (3) where divisions of lands have been altered under Inclosure Acts (g), (4) where the boundaries of parishes have been changed (h), (5) where lands have been included in an apportionment by mistake (i), (6) where rentcharge has been made payable to the wrong person or in the wrong interest (k), (7) where the Board, with the consent of the owners, think it desirable (l), (8) where alterations have made the collection of the rentcharge unreasonably difficult or inconvenient (m), and (9) where through the removal of fences difficulties have arisen as to what land is liable to rentcharge etc (n)

SECT 1—The Nature of Crime in General.

SUB-SECT 1—Definitions

Definition of crime.

499 Criminal law and procedure deal with the nature, prosecution, and punishment of crime

A crime is an unlawful act or default which is an offence against the public, and renders the person guilty of the act or default liable to legal punishment (a) While a crime is often also an injury to a private person, who has a remedy in a civil action, it is as an act or default contrary to the order, peace, and well-being of society that a crime is punishable by the State (b) A civil proceeding has for its object the recovery of money or other property, or the

Owsen* (1829), 9 B & C 595, at p 599 "An illegal act which is a wrong against the public welfare seems to have the necessary elements of a crime" (Magui Steamship Co v McGregor, Gow & Co (1889), 23 Q B D 598, C. A., at p. 606, per Lord ESHER, M R.)

(b) This is expressed by the common forms at the end of indictments "against the peace of our Lord the King," or "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided" And see Parlier v Green (1862), 2 B. & S 299, McLor v Denham (1880), 5 Q. enforcement of a right for the advantage of the person suing, while a criminal proceeding has for its object the punishment of a public offence (c).

SECT. 1.
The Nature of Crime in General.

Punishment.

500. Legal punishment is punishment awarded in a process which is instituted at the suit of the Crown "standing forward as prosecutor on behalf of the subject on public grounds" (d); such process when instituted can only be stayed at the instance of the Attorney-General acting on behalf of the Crown, and such punishment when awarded can only be remitted by the Crown or Parliament.

Legal punishment is of various kinds, and includes death, imprisonment, detention, flogging, fine and confiscation of property; it is sometimes attended with disqualification, loss of civil status and political rights (e).

SUB-SECT. 2—Criminal Intention.

501. A person cannot be guilty of a crime unless he has committed an overt act, i.e., an act capable of being observed by someone else, or has made default in doing some such act (f), and unless a wrongful intention or some other blameworthy condition of the

(c) A-G v Radloff (1854), 10 Exch 84, per PLATT, B, at p 101. See also Re Douglas (1842), 3 Q. B 825. If a statute prohibits or commands an act of commission or omission of public importance, disobedience to the statute is criminal and punishable by indictment, unless such proceeding manifestly appears to be excluded by the statute (2 Hawk. P. O., c 25, s 4, [As regards the references to Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, it may be noted that the editions chiefly used are those by Leach (1795), and Curwood (1824). There is some difference of opinion as to the merits of these editions, but after consideration the editors have given the preference to the latter, which is the edition used in many of the courts and in most of the principal law libraries. In some cases reference has been made to the first (1716) folio edition], R v Hall, [1891] 1 Q. B 747). An act or default may be "forbidden by statute in such a way that the person guilty may be liable to a pecuniary penalty, which is recoverable as a debt by civil process by a private person, or in some cases only by an officer of the Crown, such an act or default is an offence against the statute, but is not a crime (see Atcheson v Everett (1776), 1 Cowp. 382, Ex parte Beeching (1825), 4 B & C 136, A-G v Siddon (1830), 1 Cr & J. 220, A-G v Radloff (1854), 10 Exch 84, Parker v Green (1862), 2 B. & S. 299, R v Hawkhurst (Parish) (1862), 26 J. P. 772, A-G v Bradlaugh (1885), 14 Q. B. D. 867, C. A., R v Tyler, [1891] 2 Q. B. 588, C. A., per BOWEN, L. J., at p 594). The words "penalty" and "offence" are sometimes used of a criminal act (see R v Paget (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 151), sometimes of an act which is not criminal (A-G v Radloff, supra). The same act or default may give rise to a civil and to a criminal proceeding, e.g., assault and battery, wounding, larceny, libel. See title ACTION, Vol. I, pp 27—29, as to civil actions in respect of felonious torts.

(d) Burdett v. Abbot (1811), 14 East, 154, at p 162, per BAYLEY, J. Any private person, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, can commence a criminal prosecution, but the prosecution is always at the suit of the Crown. Hence it is that criminal proceedings were called pleas of the Crown.

(e) See p 409, post.

(f) In some kinds of treason (e.g., compassing the death of the Sovereign) the intention constitutes the crime, but the law requires that the intention should be manifested by some overt act (R v Thistlewood (1820), 33 State Tr. 682; see p. 451, post). In conspiracy, the agreement of two or more persons to do an unlawful act is criminal, as the agreement can only be arrived at by consultation, which is an overt act, if two or more persons so agree, the very plot is an mind (mens rea) can be imputed to him in respect of such act or default (g).

A blameworthy condition of the mind will not be imputed to a person who does an overt act, unless the act is voluntary; in many cases the act will not be criminal unless it is also deliberately intended (h).

Mens rea, or a blameworthy condition of the mind, may consist of a traitorous or malicious or fraudulent intent or of guilty knowledge or negligence (i), or, if an act is morally wrong and is also forbidden by law (j), mens rea may consist of the mere intent to do the act. But mens rea may also consist simply of an intent to do an act which is forbidden by law, or to omit to do an act when the omission is an offence (k).

bility of

servants.

502 Where a particular intent or state of mind is of the essence of an offence, the person committing the act is not criminally responsible, if he had no mens rea and the act was ordered or procured by another person, but the person who ordered or procured the act is criminally responsible (l).

In general a person is not criminally liable for an act or omission unless he has himself committed or omitted the act or authorised or known of or shut his eyes to the commission or omission (m).

act of itself and is criminal (Mulcahy v R (1868), L R 3 H L 306, R v Aspinall (1876), 2 Q B D 48 C A, per BRETT, J, at p 58).

(g) Actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea, see Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, Vol II, 94. As to cases where mens rea need not be proved, see infra.

(h) 4 Bl Com 20. A voluntary act or omission is one which is willed. An involuntary act or omission is one which is not willed, e.g., an act done by a person in a state of unconsciousness, as in sleep, or by a person of such tender years or in such a state of idiocy or insanity that he has, or is deemed to have, no mind and therefore no will (see p 241, post), or by a person who is constrained by overwhelming force to act in a particular way (see p 243, post). For the purposes of criminal law, an act or omission is voluntary if it might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care, thus a negligent act or omission is willed, because the person responsible does not will to prevent the commission or omission. An accidental act or omission is involuntary, and therefore not criminal, if it could not have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care (see p 238, post). An act is intended when it is willed and when the ordinary consequences of the act are contemplated and desired (see Austin's Jurisprudence, Vol I, p 441, Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, Vol I, 99). As to the effect of drink on the will, see p 242, post.

(j) R v Prince (1875), L R 2 O C R 154, R v Tolson (1889), 23 Q B D 168, C A. If the act is morally wrong, it is no defence in such a case that the accused did not know that the act was forbidden by law (R v Prince, supra).

(k) See R v Bishop (1880), 5 Q B D 259, C O R., Bank of New South Wales v Piper, [1897] A O 383, P C, at p 389. In such case an intent to break the law is imputed, as a person cannot set up ignorance of law as an excuse (see p 236, post).

SECT. 1.

The Nature of Crime in General.

The condition of mind of a servant or agent is not imputed to the master or principal so as to make him criminally liable (a). A master is not criminally liable merely because his servant or agent commits a negligent (b) or malicious (c) or fraudulent act. But in cases where a particular intent or state of mind is not of the essence of the offence, the acts or defaults of a servant or agent in the ordinary course of his employment may make the master or principal criminally liable, although he was not aware of such acts or defaults, and even where they were against his orders (d)

(c) R v Huggins (1730), 2 Ld. Raym. 1574. A master is not responsible criminally for his servant's libel, if he can prove that the publication was without his authority and did not proceed from want of due care or caution on his part (Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96), s. 7, and see R v Holbrook (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 60, (1878) 4 Q. B. D. 42

(d) R v Stephens (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 702, see A. G. v Siddons (1830), 1 Cr. & J. 220, R v Medley (1834), 6 C. & P. 292, Barnes v Akroyd (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 474, but see Chisholm v Doulton, supra. Under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), the acts of the servant unknown to the master may make the master criminally liable (see Harley v Higginbotham (1898), 42 Sol. Jo. 309 (refusal to sell to a police officer), Morris v Corbett (1892), 56 J. P. 649, Brown v Foot (1892), 61 L. J. (M. C.) 110 (sale of milk from which cream had been extracted), but see Kearley v. Longe (1891), 60 L. J. (M. C.) 169, which, however, is probably not law. See title FOOD AND DRUGS. For other instances of a master or principal being criminally liable for the acts of his servant or agent, see Davies v Harvey (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 433 (supply of goods to be used for parochial relief), Mullins v Collins (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 292 (supplying liquor to constable on duty), Redgate v Haynes (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 89, Bond v Evans (1888), 21 Q. B. D. 249 (suffering gaming), but see Somerset v Hart (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 360, Roberts v Woodward (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 412 (weights and measures), Collman v Mills, [1897] 1 Q. B. 396 (bye-law), Bosley v Davies (1875), 1 Q. B. D. 84 (suffering gaming). Commissioners of Police v Cartman, [1898] 1 Q. B. 655 (sale of intoxicating liquor to drunken person). See also title MASTER AND SERVANT. In a prosecution under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2(2), for selling goods to which a false trade description is applied, the master is criminally liable for the acts of his servant acting within the general scope of his employment, but contrary to his orders, unless he can show that he has acted in good faith and has done all that it was reasonably possible to do to prevent the commission of the offence by his servants (Coppen v Moore (No. 2), [1898] 2 Q. B. 306), the onus of proof is on the master, and, if he can show that he has acted innocently, he is not criminally liable (Christie, Manson and Woods v Cooper, [1900] 2 Q. B. 522). A licensed person cannot be convicted under the Intoxicating Liquors (Sale to Children) Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 27), s. 2, of "knowingly allowing a person to sell" intoxicating liquor to a child under fourteen in a vessel not properly corked or sealed, if the liquor is sold by a servant without the knowledge of the master and against his express orders and the master was himself in charge of the premises at the time (Emery v. Noloth, [1903] 2 K. B. 284), see also title INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

504 In all the graver class of crimes a particular intent or state of mind is a necessary ingredient of the offence, and must be averred in the indictment and proved by the prosecution (f).

When an act which is of itself indifferent becomes criminal if done with a particular intent, the intent must be proved (g). But when the act is unequivocal, the proof that it was done may of itself be evidence of the intention which the nature of the act conveys (h). In such case there is a presumption of law that the person accused intended the probable consequences of his act (i).

mens rea.

505 When the existence of a particular intent or state of mind is a necessary ingredient of the offence, and prima facie proof of the existence of such intent or state of mind has been given by the prosecution, the defendant may excuse himself by disproving the existence in him of any guilty intent or state of mind, e.g., by showing that he was justified in doing the act with which he is charged (k), or that he did it accidentally, or in ignorance (a), or that he had an honest and reasonable belief in the existence of facts which, if they had really existed, would have made the act both legally and morally innocent (b).

(c) See title CORPORATIONS, Vol VIII, p 390. There is a special proceeding against corporations which was originally criminal, namely, an information by quo warranto against a corporation for negligence or abuse of its franchises, but this has now for long been regarded as a civil proceeding (see 1 Bl Com. 473, 3 ibid 263, 4 ibid. 307, Judicature Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict c 61), s 15), and see A-G v London Corporation (1883), 8 State Tr 1039, and title CROWN PRACTICE.

(f) See p 341, post. Sometimes a statute which constitutes an offence, while not expressly making a particular intent or state of mind a necessary ingredient of the offence, does so by implication (R v Cohen (1858), 8 Cox, O. C. 41, Hearn v Garfon (1859), 28 L J (M C) 216, R v Sleep (1861), 8 Cox, O C 472 Core v James (1871), L R 7 Q. B. 135, in such a case the intent or state of mind must be affirmatively proved by the prosecution (Nichols v Hall (1873), L R 8 O P 322, Small v Warr (1882), 47 J P 20, Sherras v De Rutzen, [1895] 1 Q. B. 918, Derbyshire v Houlston, [1897] 1 Q. B. 772), see also R. v. Stoddart (1909), 25 T L R 612, C O A.

(g) Woodfall's Case (1770), 20 State Tr 895 at p 919, per Lord MANSFIELD, C J. R v Philpotts (1805), 8 East, 464.

(h) R v Farborough, [1895] 2 Q. B. 484, C O R., R v Lynch (1903), per Lord ALVERSTONE, C J, Official Report, 151. Thus, if a person utters a forged bill knowing that it is forged, and meaning that the bill should be taken as a genuine bill, the inevitable conclusion is that he intended to defraud (R v Hill (1838), 8 C. & P. 274, R v Cooks (1838), ibid 582).

(i) It is a "universal principle that when a man is charged with doing an act of which the probable consequences may be highly injurious, the intention is an inference of law resulting from doing the act," see R v Dixon (1814), 3 M. & S. 11 per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C J, at p. 15, R v Hicklin (1866), L R. 3 Q. B. 360, at p 375, Miles v Hutchings, [1903] 2 K. B. 714, and compare R v Meade, [1909] 1 K. B. 895.

(k) E.g., by acting in self-defence or in the exercise of some legal duty or right; see p. 608, post.

(a) See p. 238, post.

(b) R v Tolson (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 168, C O R., R v Prince (1875), L. R. 2 O. C. R. 164, Aberdare Local Board v Hammett (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B.

506. There are certain offences in the prosecution of which proof of a particular intent or state of mind is not incumbent on the prosecution (c) In some of these cases the defendant may excuse himself by proving that his intent or state of mind was innocent (d). But in others, no such excuse is available (e)

The prosecution may prove, but are not bound to prove, the motive for a crime, and, even in cases where innocence of intention is a defence, innocence of motive is no defence (f) An act which 162, see Bank of New South Wales v Piper, [1897] A. C. 383, P. C., at p. 389, and infra. Under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), ss. 5, 6, 7, the defence of reasonable cause of belief is available in certain cases when the act is not morally innocent (see pp. 616, 617, 623, post).

(c) E.g., indictable nuisances (see R v Stephens (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 702). In the case of a sale by a keeper of licensed premises of intoxicating liquor to a drunken person, proof of knowledge by the accused of the condition of the person is not necessary (Oundy v Le Cocq (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 207), where possession of unsound meat for the purpose of sale and intended for human food is shown, proof of knowledge by the accused of the condition of the meat is unnecessary (Blaker v Tillstone, [1894] 1 Q. B. 345, and see title FOOD AND DRUGS), in a prosecution for an assault on a constable in the execution of his duty, proof of knowledge of the accused that the constable was so acting is unnecessary (R. v. Forbes (1865), 10 Cox, C. C. 362, R v Maxwell (1909), 73 J. P. 176).

(d) In prosecutions for some of the offences under the Debtors Act, 1860 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 11, the onus of proving the absence of fraudulent intention is expressly cast on the defendant (see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., p. 354). So, in a prosecution under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2 (2) (Christie, Manson and Woods v Cooper, [1900] 2 Q. B. 522, and see p. 568, post).

(e) Under this head fall many indictable nuisances, the procedure in which is only in form criminal (see R v Stephens (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 702). A prosecution for trespass in pursuit of game is also criminal in form, but has for its object the security of a civil right, in such a prosecution bond fide belief by the defendant that he was not a trespasser is no defence (Morden v Porter (1860), 7 O. B. (N. S.) 641, Watkins v Mayor (1875), L. R. 10 O. P. 862). There are a number of cases analogous to public nuisances, where an act is peremptorily forbidden and innocence of intention or mistaken belief is no defence (R v Bishop (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 259, O. C. R.). In prosecutions under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), a person who sells an adulterated or "altered" article of food may be convicted, although he does not know of the adulteration or alteration (Betts v Armistead (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 771, Pain v Boughtwood (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 353, Dyke v Gower, [1892] 1 Q. B. 220, Morris v Corbett (1892), 56 J. P. 649, Brown v Foot (1892), 61 L. J. (M. C.) 110, Parker v. Alder, [1899] 1 Q. B. 20). In a prosecution under s. 2 of the Intoxicating Liquors (Sale to Children) Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 27), which makes it an offence for a licensed person to sell intoxicating liquor to a child under fourteen except in a vessel properly corked or sealed, bond fide belief on the part of the licensed person that the vessel in which the liquor was sold was properly corked and sealed is no defence (Brooks v Mason, [1902] 2 K. B. 743). So mere possession of a prohibited article may be criminal without knowledge (see R v Marsh (1824), 2 B. & O. 717 (possession of game by carrier), R v Woodrow (1846), 15 M. & W. 404 (possession of adulterated tobacco by dealer)). Most of these cases where ignorance or innocence of intention is no defence are cases punishable by fines, and many of them are only punishable on summary conviction before magistrates.

(f) Intention is an operation of the will directing an overt act, motive is the feeling which prompts the operation of the will, the ulterior object of the person willing, e.g., if a person kills another, the intention directs the act which causes death, the motive is the object which the person had in view, e.g., the satisfaction of some desire, such as revenge etc (see Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, Vol. II., 110).

SUB SECT 3 Grounds of Defence and Exemptions from Criminal Liability

507 Bona fide mistake or ignorance as to matters of fact may be available as a defence (h) Ignorance of law cannot be set up as a defence even by a foreigner (i), although it may be a ground for the mitigation of sentence (k)

A continuous act or proceeding, not originally unlawful, commenced before the passing of a statute which prohibits it, cannot be treated as unlawful by reason of the passing of the statute, until a reasonable time has been allowed for the discontinuance of the act or proceeding, and in considering what is a reasonable time for such discontinuance the question whether a person is or is not ignorant of the passing of the statute or whether his ignorance is in the circumstances excusable may be taken into account (l)

In cases where a particular intent or state of mind is of the essence of an offence, a mistaken but bona fide belief by a defendant that he had a right to do a particular act may be a complete defence as showing that he had no criminal intent (m)

Accident.

508 The defence of accident or "inadvertence without culpability" is available in all those cases in which a particular intent or state of mind is of the essence of the offence. A person who is accused of such an offence may excuse himself by showing that, although he did the act or made the omission which is the subject

(g) Thus, to a charge of publishing an obscene libel, if the publication is in fact obscene, it is no defence that the defendant had a good motive, e.g., to expose the evils of the confessional (R v Hicklin (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 360, Stear v Brannan (1872), L.R. 7 O.P. 261). In a prosecution for an indecent assault or abduction it is no defence that the defendant's motives were pure, e.g. to draw the attention of the public to the prevalence of alleged evils (R v Jurett, Times, 9th November, 1885, p. 3, 11th November, 1885, p. 3, C.C.C. Sessions Papers, October, 1885), and see p. 622, post. If a person removes a corpse from a grave without lawful authority, it is no defence to such a person that he acted from pious and laudable motives (R v Sharpe (1857), Dears. & B. 160). And if a duty is imposed by law and the breach of the duty is made punishable, a defendant who is charged with the breach cannot set up as a defence that he has a "conscientious objection" to perform the duty which was imposed (R v Downes (1875), 1 Q.B.D. 25, C.C.R., R v Senior, [1899] 1 Q.B. 283, C.C.R.), but see the Vaccination Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 49), and title PUBLIC HEALTH.

See the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 52, which makes it an offence wilfully and maliciously to commit any damage etc. upon any real or personal property, but excepts all cases where a person acts under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of. See Watkins v Mayor (1875), L.R. 10 C. P. 603. S. 52 only relates to summary proceedings.

of the charge, he did it while he was acting lawfully and through inadvertence and without culpable negligence (n).

509 In some cases where the criminal act charged consists of trespass to the person or to property, the consent of the person injured is a complete defence. Thus, to constitute an assault an act must be against the consent of the person to whom it is done (a), and to constitute larceny property must be taken inuito domino (b).

Consent is no defence where it has been obtained by fraud or threats or violence (c). In the case of children and others of defective intellect, submission to an unlawful act in ignorance of its nature does not amount to consent (d). As regards some crimes there is express statutory provision that the consent of children under a certain age is not to be available as a defence (e).

There are many other crimes as to which the consent of the person injured is no defence. Thus, it is not in the power of any one to give a consent, effectual to bar a criminal prosecution, to an act which amounts to or has a direct tendency to create a breach of the peace (f), or to an act which amounts to mayhem (g) or to murder (h).

SECT. 2.—Criminal Capacity.

SUB SECT. 1.—Infancy

510 Criminal liability cannot be imputed to an infant under the age of seven years. There is an irrebuttable presumption of law that a child under that age is incapable of committing a crime (i). Infants.

If an infant between the age of seven and fourteen years commits an act which in the case of a person over fourteen years of age would amount to a felony or to some other offence of which animus malus is an essential ingredient, there is a presumption of law that the infant had not sufficient capacity to know that what he did was wrong, but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence, and on such evidence being given the infant may be criminally liable. Knowledge that he was doing what was wrong cannot be presumed from the mere commission of the act, but may be proved by the circumstances attending the act and the manner in which it was done (k).

There is, however, an irrebuttable presumption that a boy under the age of fourteen years is incapable of having carnal knowledge (l); he therefore cannot be convicted of committing rape (m), nor can he be convicted of the felony of having unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl under the age of thirteen, nor can he be convicted of the attempt to commit either of these crimes (n). Evidence cannot be given that a boy under fourteen is physically capable of committing either of these crimes (o).

Persons over fourteen.

511 All persons over the age of fourteen years are presumed to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for crimes, unless the contrary is proved (p). Therefore, an infant over that age is in most respects, as regards criminal liability, in the same position as a person of full age (q), except when a crime is such that it can only be committed by a person of full age (r). He may be guilty of larceny as a bailee, although he cannot enter into a contract of bailment (s).

(k) E.g., by evidence of design, concealment, exceptional ferocity (1 Hale, P C 25, 26, Fitzherbert, Grand Abridgment, tit Corone, 57, R v York (1748), Post 70, R v Owen (1830), 4 C & P 236, R v Wild (1835), 1 Mood C O 452, R v Smith (1845), 1 Cox, C O 260, R v Vumplew (1862), 3 F. & F 520, R v Kershaw (1902), 18 T L R 357)

But he can be found guilty of being a principal in the second degree, when he assists a person over the age of fourteen to commit a rape (R v Eldershaw (1828), 3 C & P 396, per VAUGHAN, B). As to rape, see p 611, post, and as to unnatural offences, see p 540, post.

It is doubtful whether he can be found guilty of an assault with intent to commit a rape (see R v Eldershaw (1828), 3 C. & P 396, R v Philips (1839), 8 C & P 736, R v Wattle, supra, R v Williams, supra).

(q) 1 Hale, P C 25. It is doubtful whether an infant can be indicted for a forcible entry or for a misprision (1 Hale, P C 21, 4 Bac. Abr, tit Infancy H, 7th ed, 352). It seems that if a person is liable ratione tenuræ to repair a highway, infancy is no defence to an indictment for non repair, and that this applies even to infants under the age of fourteen (R v Sutton (1835), 3 Ad & El. 697, 2 Co. Inst. 703, s 6). The statement in 4 Bl. Com 22 that "the law of England does in some cases privilege an infant under the age of twenty-one as to common misdemeanours, so as to escape fine, imprisonment and the like, particularly in cases of omissions in not repairing a bridge or a highway and other similar offences," is not consistent with the passage in 1 Hale, P. C. 20, 21, 22, which Blackstone cites as an authority for his statement, see R v Sutton, supra, at pp. 601—602.

(r) E.g., an infant cannot be adjudicated a bankrupt, except, perhaps, on a debt for necessaries (see title BANKRUPTCY, Vol. II, p 11). An infant cannot be convicted of criminal offences under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 42), s. 12 (see R v Wilson (1879), 5 Q. B. D. 28, C O R).

SUB-SECT. 2.—*Insanity.*SECT. 2
Criminal Capacity.
Insanity.

512. Where it can be shown that a person at the time of his committing or omitting an act, the commission or omission of which would otherwise be criminal, was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature or quality of the act or omission, or as not to know that he was doing what was wrong, then such a person is not in law responsible for his act (a)

The question whether a prisoner, at the time when he committed an act or made an omission, was or was not insane so as not to be responsible according to law for his actions is a question of fact which the jury must determine under the direction of the judge (b).

If the person accused is proved to have had, at the time of the act or omission charged, no mind at all, or to have been suffering from delirium, then the jury may properly conclude that he was not responsible in law for his actions (c)

The defence of insanity may be set up, when the accused is only partially insane (d) If a person is only partially insane, and it is proved by evidence that he suffered from delusions, then he is for the purposes of criminal responsibility to be considered in the same situation as though the facts to which his delusions relate had really existed (e)

If the facts which he supposes in his delusion to exist would justify the act or omission, if they had really existed, then he is to be excused; if they would not, then he is responsible at law for his actions (e).

(a) M'Naghten's Case (1843), 10 Cl & Fin 200, H L, R v. Offord (1831), 5 O & P 168, R v. Goode (1837), 7 Ad & El 536, R v. Oxford (1840), 9 O & P 525, R v. Hugginson (1843), 1 Car & Kir 129, R v. Layton (1849), 4 Cox, C C 149, R v. Richards (1858), 1 F & F 87, R v. Davies (1858), 1 F & F 69, R v. Townley (1863), 3 F & F 839, R v. Law (1864), 2 F & F 836, R v. Vyse (1862), 3 F & F 247, R v. Lough (1866), 4 F. & F 915, R v. Dixon (1869), 11 Cox, C C 341, R v. Southey (1865), 4 F & F 54, R v. Pate (1850), 8 St Tr (N. S.) 1

(b) The question of insanity being one of fact, there was, before the passing of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), no legal authority on the subject other than the summings-up of the judges (see the cases collected in note (a), supra, and the answers of the judges in M'Naghten's Case, supra); these answers were given to the House of Lords extra-judicially, and their authority is doubtful (see Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, Vol. II, p 153) One of these answers (the 5th) was criticised by ALDERSON, B, in R v. Frances (1849), 4 Cox, C C 57. An appeal now lies to the Court of Criminal Appeal on the ground of the insanity of the defendant, see p 436, post

(c) See R v. Townley (1863), 3 F & F 839, per MARTIN, B, at p. 846

(d) Insanity may be either congenital and permanent (dementia naturalis)—this is the state of idiots whose mental faculties have never grown—or it may be the darkening of mental faculties which have reached a certain stage of growth (dementia accidentalis) (1 Hale, P C 29) This latter variety of the disease may be total or partial, permanent or occasional. In most cases of this kind the disease is partial or occasional, and it is in reference to these cases that difficulties arise in determining whether a person is responsible in law for his actions (Taylor, Medical Jurisprudence, 5th ed., Vol I, p 878). Moreover, insanity is a disease of the mind, and has often no other objective symptoms than the actions of the person suffering from its influence. See title LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND

(e) See the opinion of the majority of the judges in M'Naghten's Case, supra (4th question) Compare R v. Pate (1850), 8 State Tr. (N. S.) 1, per ALDERSON, B., at p. 47.

SECT. 2.

Criminal Capacity.*Moral
insanity.

513 To show that a person was, at the time when he committed an act or made an omission, insane so as not to be responsible in law for his actions, proof must be given of the existence of disease of the mind or intellectual insanity neither "moral insanity," i.e., the state when the intellectual faculties are sound and the moral faculties diseased (f), nor a mere "uncontrollable impulse of the mind" co-existing with the full possession of the reasoning faculties, is any defence (g)

proof

514. The onus of establishing insanity is on the accused; affirmative evidence must be given by medical or other witnesses showing that he was suffering from mental disease at the time or shortly before or after the act or omission charged (h)

The mere fact that an act or omission is without apparent motive is not by itself sufficient to establish insanity (i) But if there is other evidence of insanity, such a fact may be of importance as helping to prove insanity (k)

verdict.

515 Insanity is not an absolute defence in the case of a person charged with a crime If insanity is proved in such a case, a jury cannot now, as they could formerly, acquit the accused, but they may bring in a special verdict that he was guilty of the act or omission charged against him, but was insane so as not to be responsible according to law for his actions, at the time when the act was done or the omission made The result of this verdict is that the court orders the accused to be kept in custody as a criminal lunatic, till the King's pleasure is known (l).

SUB-SECT 3 — *DrunkennessDelirium
tremens

516 A person suffering from delirium tremens, which so affects his mind that he is not conscious of the nature of an act which he commits, who does a criminal act without knowing that it is wrong, is entitled, when on his trial for such an act, to the same verdict as if he had been suffering from insanity (m)

Drunkenness

517 A person who becomes drunk as the result of his own voluntary act, and while drunk commits a crime, is not excused for

(l) Linal of Lunatics Act, 1863 (46 & 47 Vict. c 39), s 2, and see title LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND The defence of insanity is in practice generally limited to those charges in respect of which the penalty of death may be inflicted (see E. v. Reynolds (1843), Taylor, Medical Jurisprudence, 5th ed., Vol. I., p. 870) As to the procedure in case of a prisoner being insane after his committal or at the time of his trial, see p. 354, post the crime by reason of his drunkenness alone (n), for a person, although drunk, may be capable of forming an intention and therefore of committing an act. But a person may by drunkenness be rendered entirely incapable of forming an intention, and drunkenness may therefore, even though voluntary, sometimes be used as a defence for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of a criminal intention which would otherwise arise from an act; such presumption is deemed to be rebutted, where it is shown that the accused's mind was so affected by drink that he was incapable of knowing that what he was doing was dangerous or wrongful (o).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Compulsion

518. A person compelled by physical force to do an act which, if voluntarily done, would be a crime, is free from criminal responsibility, but the person compelling him is criminally liable (p). Compulsion.

The use of threats inducing a person, from present fear of death, to join with rebels is, it seems, an excuse, so long as the person is under the influence of such fear (q). Subject to this exception, a person who commits a crime when influenced by threats or "moral force," or by the confinement of his person, or by violence not amounting to actual compulsion, is not excused (r). Threats.

The mere fact that a person does a criminal act in obedience to the order of a duly constituted superior does not excuse the person who does the act from criminal liability, but the fact that a person does an act in obedience to a superior whom he is bound to obey, might exclude the inference of malice or wrongful intention which might otherwise follow from the act (s). Obedience to authority

The statute (1495) 11 Hen. 7, c. 1, excuses the obedience paid to a de facto king,

SECT. 2.

Criminal Capacity.*Presumption of coercion.SUB-SECT. 5 — Husband and Wife

519 If husband and wife act together in committing certain crimes and the wife acts in the presence of her husband, there is a presumption that the wife acted under the coercion of her husband, and if she is tried for such an act, she is prima facie entitled to an acquittal (t).

This rule applies to larceny, burglary (a), robbery with violence (b), receiving stolen goods (c), felonious wounding (d), and uttering counterfeit coins or forged notes (e).

The rule does not apply to murder or treason (f), or to a mere assault (g), or false swearing (h), or to such offences as keeping a disorderly house (i) or a gaming house (k), or to acts committed by a wife in the absence of her husband (l).

The presumption is prima facie only, and may be rebutted by evidence that the wife was the instigator of the act or the more active party, or that the husband, though present, was incapable of coercing her as being the weaker of the two or a cripple or bed-ridden (m).

SUB-SECT. 6 — *Privileged PersonsThe King exempt from criminal jurisdiction

520 The King is exempt from all criminal liability. As he can do no wrong, he cannot be called to account criminally any but does not, according to those cases, apply where there is no king de facto. A soldier who in obedience to the order of a superior officer did an act which would otherwise be criminal would probably be excused, if the soldier might fairly suppose that the officer had good reasons for giving the order (see Stephen, History of Criminal Law, Vol. I, 205), as to disobedience by a soldier to a lawful command of a superior officer, see Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), s. 9.

By the comity of nations a reigning sovereign of another State is treated as exempt from the criminal as well as the civil jurisdiction of all other countries (o).

No one but a sovereign is personally exempt in England from criminal jurisdiction to which all persons who reside in the country, whether subjects or aliens, are liable (p).

There cannot be a criminal prosecution for a libel by a husband on his wife, or vice versa (see title LIBEL AND SLANDER), and only in certain events can either be convicted of stealing the goods of the other (p. 634, post). SECT. 3.—Degrees of Criminal Liability.

SUB SECT. 1 —Classification of Crimes

523 Crimes are divided into three classes—treasons, felonies, and misdemeanours

Treason.

The name treason is given to certain crimes which are more particularly directed against the safety of the Sovereign and the State (a).

Felonies

All indictable crimes below the degree of treason are either felonies or misdemeanours (b)

Felonies are those crimes which are such by common law or have been made such by statute

Misde-meanours

All crimes which are not treasons or felonies are misdemeanours either by common law or by statute (c)

(a) As to treason, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol VI, p 345, and p 450, post

(b) Offences created by statute and made punishable only on summary conviction are sometimes spoken of as misdemeanours (see Du Cros v Lambourne, [1907] 1 K B at p 44, but see Tomlin's Law Dictionary, title Misdemeanour)

(c) The most important points of difference between treasons, felonies, and misdemeanours are as follows—(1) Accessories—In felonies a distinction is drawn between principals and accessories (see p 248, post), but there is no such distinction either in treason or in misdemeanours (2) Misprision—A person who conceals a treason or felony without consenting to it commits the offence of misprision of treason or felony (see p 248, post), there is no such offence in respect of a misdemeanour (3) Compounding a felony—It is a criminal offence to compound a felony, i.e., to agree not to prosecute (see p 503, post), but an agreement not to prosecute for a misdemeanour, though unlawful in many cases (see Collins v Blantern (1767), 1 Smith, L C, 11th ed, 369) is not criminal, unless it amounts to a conspiracy to obstruct or defeat the course of justice (see Stephen, History of Criminal Law, Vol. I, p 502, and see p 504, post) (4) Arrest—If a treason or a felony has been committed, anyone may without a warrant arrest a person against whom there is reasonable ground of suspicion (2 Co Inst. 52, see p 296, post), a constable may arrest anyone whom he has reasonable ground to suspect of having committed, or being about to commit, a felony (Beckwith v Philby (1827), 6 B & C 635) In cases of misdemeanour, with some exceptions, there is no power to arrest without a warrant (see p 298, post) (5) Bail—A person accused of treason or felony has no right to be bailed, but the court which has jurisdiction to grant bail may exercise its discretion and grant or refuse bail, a person accused of misdemeanour has an absolute right to bail, if he applies to the High Court of Justice under the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car 2 c 2) (R v Badger (1843), 4 Q B 466, Lanford v Fitzroy (1849), 13 Q B 240, at p 246, R v Spilsbury, [1898] 2 Q B 615, at p 622, and see R v Frost (1888), 4 T L R 767), a person accused of certain misdemeanours had formerly a right to be bailed by justices of the peace, but now there does not seem any such right except in the case of charges for the non-repair of highways or bridges A person accused of treason can only be bailed by an order of a Secretary of State or of the High Court or of a judge of the High Court in vacation (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 23, Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), ss 16, 34, Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s 19). A person accused of felony or misdemeanour may be bailed by the justices of the peace before whom he is brought or by the court that tries him, or by a judge of the High Court in chambers (see p 323, post) (6) Copy of Indictment and List of Witnesses—A person accused of high treason has a right to the delivery ten days before trial of a copy of the indictment and a list of the witnesses against him (Treason Act, 1695 (7 & 8 Will. 3, c 3), s 7, Treason

Degrees of Criminal Liability.

Degrees of complicity

524 All who take part in a crime with a guilty intent are criminally liable, whether they are the actual perpetrators of the crime or whether, not being the actual perpetrators, they are present aiding and abetting when it is committed, or whether, though

Act, 1708 (7 Ann c 21), s 14, R v Frost (1839), 4 State Tr (N s) 85). In prosecutions for misdemeanour the defendant, it seems, is entitled to a copy of the information or indictment (Pleading in Misdemeanour Act, 1819 (60 Geo 3 & 1 Geo 4, c 4), s 8, Twyn's Case (1663), 6 State Tr 618). A person accused of felony has no right to a copy of the indictment (Proceedings against the Five Popish Lords (1685), 7 State Tr 1218, at p 1243, Fitzharris's Case (1681) 8 State Tr 243, 268, Rosewell's Case (1684), 10 State Tr 266, Preston's (Viscount) Case (1691), 12 State Tr 668, R v Dowling (1848), 3 Cox, (1) O 509, R v Mitchell (1848), 3 Cox, O O 1, see 1 Lew O O 205, n, Post 228, 2 Hale, P O 236, 2 Hawk P C, 8th ed., 557). The modern practice, however, is to allow the legal advisers of an accused person to inspect the indictment (R v Dowling (1849), 7 State Tr (N s) 381). As to the right of all persons under trial to copies of depositions, see p 322, post (7) Trial -- (i) Challenges of jurors. A person in most cases of high treason may peremptorily challenge thirty-five jurors (Treason Act, 1695 (7 & 8 Will 3, c 3), s 2), in murder and all other felonies and in some treasons (compassing the King's death and attempts against the person of the King) the person accused may peremptorily challenge twenty jurors (Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo 4, c 50), s 29, Gray v R (1814), 6 State Tr (N s) 117, see p 359, post). In misdemeanours there is no right of peremptory challenge, but the defendant may challenge jurors for cause (Reading's Case (1679), 7 State Tr 269, 265, Cellier's Case (1680), 7 State Tr 1183, Oates's Case (1685), 10 State Tr 1080). When a person accused of felony is arraigned and pleads not guilty, the prisoner is told by the clerk of arraigns before the jury are sworn that, if he wishes to challenge them or any of them, he must do so as they come to be sworn. In trials for felony the jurors are consequently sworn separately, whilst in trials for misdemeanour the jurors are often sworn in batches. (ii) A person accused of felony must during his trial be at the bar of the court, i.e., in "the dock" as it is commonly called in most courts, aliter of a person accused of a misdemeanour (R v St George (1840), 11 C & P 183 485, R v Douglas (1841), Car & M 193, at p 194, R v Zuluetu (1843), 1 Car & Kir 215, but see Horne Tooke's Case (1794), 25 State Tr 1, 6). (iii) The form of the oath administered to the jury on the trial of a person for felony is different from the form in the case of a misdemeanour (see p 362, note (i), post). (iv) In an indictment for high treason the prisoner may be charged with different kinds of treason in different counts, an indictment ought not to charge a defendant with several different felonies, although it may charge the same felony in different ways. An indictment which joins a count for felony with a count for misdemeanour is bad (see p 342, post). (v) A person who in the course of committing a felony causes the death of another may be guilty of murder, while a person who in the course of committing a misdemeanour causes the death of another without the intention of killing him is only guilty of manslaughter (see p 579, post). (8) Punishment—Treason, murder, piracy, and setting fire to the King's ships or arsenals (see p 409, post) are punishable with death, but no misdemeanour is punishable with death. (9) Consequences of Conviction—If a person who is found guilty of treason or felony and is sentenced to death or penal servitude or any term of imprisonment with hard labour, or exceeding twelve months, holds any of certain offices or places or is entitled to certain pensions etc., he forfeits his office, place, pension etc. (see p 428, post). A person convicted of treason or felony may be ordered to make compensation for any loss suffered by a person aggrieved through or by means of the felony (see p 449, post). A person who has been convicted of treason or felony is, while he is under sentence and suffering punishment, disqualified from suing in any action or from alienating or charging his property, and an administrator of his property may be appointed (see p 439, post).

absent when the crime is committed, they had a share in procuring, inciting, counselling, or assisting others to commit the crime (d).

In felonies, but not in treasons or misdemeanours, a distinction is drawn between principals, that is, those who are present with a guilty intent, when a crime is committed, and accessories before the fact, that is, those who without being present at the time when a crime is committed, procure its commission or plan or aid in or encourage its execution. In treasons and misdemeanours all persons who aid or abet in the commission of the crime are regarded as principals, whether they are present or absent when it is committed (e).

A person who, with knowledge that treason or felony has been committed, comforts and assists the criminal after the crime has been committed is also guilty of a crime.

Those who comfort and assist a criminal after a felony has been committed are liable as accessories after the fact (f).

Those who comfort and assist a person who has committed treason and know of the crime are deemed principals (g).

A person who merely comforts and assists one who has committed a misdemeanour is not guilty of a crime (h).

Principals

525 All persons who are present, when a felony is committed, and who take a part in the actual perpetration of the offence, or aid and abet those who perpetrate it, are called principals (i). Persons who are absent when a felony is committed, but take part in procuring or contriving it, are called accessories before the fact (j).

Principals in first degree

526 There are two kinds of principals—principals in the first degree and principals in the second degree. Those who actually take part in a crime are called principals in the first degree (k) and those who are present aiding and abetting, but take no actual part in it, are called principals in the second degree. The distinction between principals in the first degree and principals in the second degree applies to misdemeanours as well as to felonies, but in

All present at the time of committing an offence are principals, though one only acts, if they are confederates and engaged in a common design of which the offence is part (R v Tattersal (1801), 1 Russell on Crimes 6th ed., 162; see *Young v. misdeameanours accessories before the fact are reckoned principals in the second degree (l).

SECT. 2.
Degrees of Criminal Liability.

Presence not essential.

527. In some cases a person is deemed a principal in the first degree although he was not present when the act was done which makes the offence complete. Thus, if one with a criminal intent contrives an injury to another and by means of the contrivance the person whom it is designed to injure receives the injury in the absence of the contriver, the latter is a principal in the first degree, although he was absent when the injury was actually inflicted (m). So a person who employs an innocent agent to commit a felony is a principal in the first degree, although he is not present when the agent does the act which consummates the felony (n).

If several persons act together in one common unlawful undertaking and a crime is committed by one of them, but it is not known by whom, all are principals in the first degree (o).

A person who with guilty intent is engaged in the execution of any part of a criminal transaction is a principal in the first degree, it is not necessary that he should be present during the entire transaction or when it is completed (p).

(m) Eg, if A, with intent to kill B, lays poison in B's way, and B or anyone else in A's absence takes it and dies in consequence, A is a principal in the murder (Fost 349, Kel 52). In such a case, if the poison is not taken by anyone, A is guilty of an attempt to murder (see p 258, post).

(n) Fost 349, Kel 52, R v Michael (1840), 2 Mood C C 120, R v Butcher (1858), Bell, C C 6, R v Williams (1842), Car & M 259, R v Giles (1827), 1 Mood C C 166, R v Bull (1840), 1 Cox, C C 281, R v Clifford (1845), 2 Car & Kir 202, R v Manley (1844), 1 Cox, C C 104, R v Bleandale (1848), 2 Car & Kir 765, per ELLI, J, at p 768, R v Bannen (1844), 2 Mood C C 309, R v Valler (1844), 1 Cox, C C 84, R v Palmer (1804), 1 Bos & P (N. R.) 96. In such cases the act of the innocent agent is deemed to be as much the act of the person who procures it as if the procurer were himself present (R v Clifford, supra). If a person being abroad or on the high seas procures an agent to commit a crime in England, the procurer is deemed to have committed the crime in England (R v Brisac (1803), 1 East, 161, R v Garrett (1853), Dears C C 232).

(o) In the case of R v Salmon (1880), 6 Q B D 79, C C R, three men went into a field near to a road and some houses for the purpose of practising rifle shooting. They all fired shots with a rifle, and no precautions were taken to prevent danger, one of the shots killed a boy in a garden near the field. It was held that all the three were guilty of manslaughter, although it was not known who fired the shot which killed the boy, all having united to fire at the spot in question, and all having omitted to take precautions to prevent danger. In the case of R v Borthwick (1779), 1 Doug (N. B.) 207, the jury found that a person was killed by a blow from one of the prisoners, but from which of them the jury did not know, the prisoners were members of a press-gang acting illegally in pressing seamen without a warrant, but there was no finding that the prisoners were all present or that they were all met together on one common illegal design, it was held that the prisoners could not be made responsible for the death of the person killed.

If several persons combine to forge an instrument, each person who executes any part of the forgery is a principal, although he may not know by whom the other parts are executed, and may not be present when the whole forgery is completed (R v Bingley

528 All who are present aiding and abetting, when a felony is committed, but who take no part in the actual perpetration of the felony, are principals in the second degree (q).

To constitute a principal in the second degree mere presence at the crime is not enough, there must be a common purpose, an intent to aid or encourage the persons who commit the crime and an actual aiding or encouraging (r).

A person who is present aiding and abetting may be a principal in the second degree, although he is, or is deemed to be, physically incapable of being a principal in the first degree (s).

A person cannot be a principal in the second degree unless a felony has been committed by a principal in the first degree (t), (1821), Russ & Ry 446, R v Kirkwood (1831), 1 Mood C C 304, R v Dade (1831) 1 Mood C C 307) If several persons take part in the actual commission of a crime, the degree of their guilt may vary according to their intent, e.g., if A, intending to murder B, attacks him, and C enters into the affray unlawfully but suddenly, and without malice aforethought, and B is killed by A and C, this is murder by A and manslaughter by C (1 Plowd 101, and see Mohun's Case (Lord) (1692), 12 State Tr 949, 1022)

(q) Coalheavers' Case (1768), 1 Leach, 64, R v Towle (1816), Russ & Ry 314 This applies to statutory felonies as well as to felonies at common law (ibid) An indictment against a principal in the second degree may charge him with committing a felony in the same way as a principal in the first degree is charged, or may charge him with "being feloniously present, aiding, abetting and assisting" the felon to commit the felony (R v Gogerly (1818), Russ & Ry 343)

(r) M'Evyn's Case (1858), Bell, C C 20 Thus, if a duel takes place and one of the combatants is killed, the surviving combatant is guilty of murder as a principal in the first degree, the seconds are principals in the second degree Other persons present, if they sustain the combatants either by advice or assistance or go to the ground for the purpose of encouraging and forwarding the conflict, are principals in the second degree (R v Young (1836), 5 C & P 644) The combatants at a prize fight with fists are guilty of assault as principals in the first degree, and all other persons who are present and take part in the management of the fight or aid and abet the combatants are principals in the second degree Mere voluntary presence at a prize fight does not necessarily make a person a principal in the second degree, if he does not encourage or assist the fight, but semble the mere presence of a person unexplained at a prize fight affords some evidence of an aiding and abetting in the fight (R v Coney (1882), 8 Q. B. D 534, C C R.) If two persons agree to commit suicide together and one accomplishes his object in the presence of and with the consent of the other, the survivor is guilty as a principal in the second degree of the murder of the one who dies (R v Dyson (1823), Russ & Ry 523, R v Alison (1838), 8 C & P 418) If the owner or person in control of a vehicle is in it, while it is being driven at an excessive speed, although he does not himself drive it, yet as he could and ought to have prevented it being so driven at an excessive speed, he is liable as a principal in the second degree for the offence of unlawfully driving (Du Cros v Lambourne, [1907] 1 K B 40)

(s) E.g. a boy under the age of fourteen years (see p 240, ante) or a woman may be a principal in the second degree in the crime of rape (R v Eldershaw (1828), 3 C & P 396, R v Ram (1893), 17 Cox, C C 609) But a girl who is of such an age that unlawful sexual intercourse with her is a crime cannot be convicted of aiding and abetting a person to have such intercourse with her (R v Tyrell, [1894] 1 Q. B 710, C C R.) A woman who consents to the use upon herself of an instrument with intent to procure her miscarriage may be convicted of "being present, aiding and abetting" the person who uses the instrument (R v Sothell (1908), 72 J. P. 428)

Criminal
Liability.

A person who has a common criminal purpose with the principal in the first degree is a principal in the second degree, if he is either actually present at the scene of the felony or present so near at hand as to enable him to afford aid to the person who commits the crime (b)

Presence at or near the scene of the felony.

A person who though privy to the commission of a felony is not, when it is committed, sufficiently near to the scene to afford aid is not a principal in the second degree, but is an accessory before the fact (c)

A person who comes up after a felony has been completed and assists the felon is not a principal, but may be an accessory after the fact (d).

529 Although a man is present while a felony is being committed, yet if he takes no part in it, and does not act in concert with those who commit it, he is not a principal in the second degree, merely because he does not endeavour to prevent the felony or to apprehend the felon (e)

(d) Eg, F steals goods from the owner's premises and removes them to a place outside, G is then told of the theft and assists in carrying the goods away to another place, G is not a principal in the second degree to the theft, but is an accessory after the fact, the asportation being complete before G did anything, he is also guilty of receiving the goods knowing them to be stolen (R v M'Makin and Smith (1808), Russ & Ry 333, n, R v King (1817), Russ. & Ry 332) But if F with felonious intent removes the goods to another part of the owner's premises, although there may have been sufficient asportation of the goods to make F guilty of larceny (see p 630, post), yet the asportation is not complete for all purposes, and if G assists in carrying the goods away, while they are still on the owner's premises, he is liable as a principal, the transaction not being complete till the goods are removed from the owner's premises (R v Dyer (1801), 2 East, P C 767) H and J wound K, H then makes off, and after he has got away L comes up and assaults K; L cannot be found guilty on an indictment charging him jointly with H and J with wounding K (R v M'Phane (1841), Car & M. 212).

that it is being committed is not liable as a principal, if he is not present for the purpose of aiding or encouraging (f)

530. If several persons are present together prepared to pursue a common unlawful object at all hazards, and one of them in furtherance of the common object does a criminal act, then all are responsible for the act, whether it was originally contemplated or not. The person who does the act is a principal in the first degree, the others are principals in the second degree (g). If the act is not done in furtherance of the common unlawful object, no one is liable for it except the person who does the act (h).

(f) Thus, where A agreed with B to get C to commit a robbery so that B should arrest C, and that A and B should divide between them a reward for the apprehension of C, and A was present when the robbery was committed, it was held that A was not guilty of the robbery as a principal in the second degree, because although he acted from a bad motive, yet he was not present to aid, but to detect, and did not intend that the felony should be successful (Dannelly's Case (1816), Russ & Ry 310). In such a case A and B are not guilty of the felony, but are guilty of a conspiracy (M'Daniel's Case (1755), 19 State Tr 745, 808).

(g) Thus, where A and B go out with the common object of robbing C, and A in pursuit of the common object does an act which causes the death of C in such circumstances that it is murder in A, it is also murder in B (R v Jackson (1857), 7 Cox, C C 357). So if two or more persons go out together for the purpose of committing a breach of the peace and in the course of the accomplishment of the common design one of them kills a man, the others are also guilty of manslaughter (R v Harrington (1831), 5 Cox, C C 231, see Cornwallis's (Lord) Case (1678), 7 State Tr 143, 157). Where a number of persons went out all armed with guns for the purpose of poaching, and on being surprised by gamekeepers threatened to shoot the gamekeepers who tried to arrest them, and one only of the poachers fired and wounded a gamekeeper, it was held that all might be found guilty of wounding with intent to murder (R v Edmeads (1828), 3 C & P 390). If two persons each drive a vehicle at a furious rate along a public road, and incite each other so to drive, and one of the vehicles runs over a man and kills him, each of the two persons is guilty of manslaughter (R v Swindall (1846), 2 Car & Kir 230).

(h) Thus, where some of a party of men, who were engaged unlawfully in breaking into a house for the purpose of apprehending suspected persons, stole goods in the house, it was held that those who took no part in the stealing were not liable for that crime, for, although they were engaged in an unlawful act, they knew not of any intent to steal (Anon (1664), 1 Leach, 7, n). If a gang of poachers attack a gamekeeper and leave him senseless on the ground and go away, and one of them returns and robs him, the others are not guilty of the robbery, as, though there was a common intent to kill game and resist the keeper, there was no common intent to steal (R v Hawks (1828), 3 C & P 392, see Anon (1723), 8 Mod Rep 164). A number of persons were engaged by the tenant of a house to assist him in carrying away his household goods to avoid distress for rent, and assembled armed with bludgeons and other weapons, the landlord of the house, accompanied by another party, came to prevent the removal of the goods, and a violent affray ensued. While they were fighting one of the company killed a boy who was standing looking on but totally unconcerned in the fray. It was held that, as the boy was unconcerned in the fray, his having been killed by one of the company could not affect the rest, who, though present, could not be said to be aiding and abetting the death of one who was totally unconcerned in the design for which the parties had assembled (R v Hodgson (1730), 1 Leach, 6, see R v Plummer (1702), 12 Mod. Rep 627). So where several persons were trespassing in a wood in pursuit of game and only one of them had a gun, and he was walking in front of the others and fired the gun and killed a gamekeeper who came upon the trespassers, it was held that these facts afforded no evidence on which the rest of the party could be found guilty of murder (R v Skeet (1866), 4 F & F 931, see R v. Edmeads (1828), 3 C & P 390) If A and B together commit a felony and upon an alarm run different ways, and A, to avoid being taken, attacks and maims C who is pursuing him, B is not liable for the injury to C (R v White (1806), Russ. & Ry 99)

531. Persons who procure, counsel, or command another to commit a felony, but are not present when it is committed, are accessories before the fact (i).

It is not necessary that there should be any direct communication between an accessory before the fact and the principal felon, it is enough if the accessory direct an intermediate agent to procure another to commit the felony without naming or knowing of the person to be procured (k).

A person is not an accessory before the fact, unless there is some sort of active proceeding on his part, he must incite or procure or encourage the criminal act, or assist or enable it to be done, or engage or counsel or command the principal to do it (l).

(i) R v Soares (1802), Russ & Ry 25, R v Gordon (1789), 1 Leach, 515 If a person is indicted as an accessory before the fact, the indictment alleges that the accused did "feloniously counsel, procure, and command" or "incite, move, aid, or hire" the felon to commit the felony, but such a person may now be indicted as a principal for committing the felony (see p 257, post) The felony may be either a felony at common law or one created by statute, although the statute uses no words expressly applicable to accessories. A number of statutes contain provisions expressly applicable to accessories, and use various expressions to describe them, e.g., the stat (1531) 23 Hen 8, c 1, speaks of "abettment, procurement, helping, maintaining or counselling", the stat (1547) 1 Edw 6, c 12, s 13, of "aiders abettors, procurers and counsellors", the stat. (1557) 4 & 5 Phil & Mar. of those who "command, hire or counsel", the stats (1588) 31 Eliz c 12, s 5, and (1623) 21 Jac 1, c 6, of "accessories", the stat (1597) 39 Eliz c 9, s 2, of "procurers or accessories", the stat (1691) 3 & 4 Will & Mar c 9, s 1, of those who "comfort, aid, abet, assist, counsel, hire or command", the stat. (1702) 1 Ann stat 2, c 9, of "counsellors and contrivers"; the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 94), s 2, of those who "counsel, procure or command" See also 1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., p 171.

(k) R v Cooper (1833), 5 C & P 535 Thus, A bids B to hire somebody to murder C, and furnishes money for that purpose, D, a person whom A never saw or heard of, is hired by B and commits the murder. A is an accessory before the fact to the act of D (M'Daniel's Case (1755), 19 State Tr, per FOSTER, J, at p 804, see also Somerset's (Earl) Case (1616), 2 State Tr 986)

(l) R v Taylor (1875), L R 2 C C R 147 In this case A and B quarrelled and agreed to fight with their fists, and to put down £1 each, so that £2 might be paid to the winner, C consented to hold the £2 and pay it over to the winner. A and B fought, and A received injuries of which he afterwards died. C, who had nothing to do with the fight and was not present at it, being informed who was the winner, but knowing nothing of A's danger, paid the £2 to B; there was no reason to suppose beforehand that the life of either A or B would be endangered. It was held that C was not an accessory to the manslaughter of A.

If A commits suicide with the assistance of B, who supplies the means by which the act is done, but is absent when the act is done, B is an accessory before the fact to the murder of A (R v Russell (1832), 1 Mood C (36)); so if A supplies B with a noxious drug with intent to procure a miscarriage and B takes the drug in A's absence and dies from its effect, A is an accessory before the fact to the murder of B (R v Russell, supra). A person who in these circumstances supplies a drug with such an intent "causes the drug to be taken," although he is absent when it is taken (Wilson's Case (1856), Dears & B 127) But if B is induced by A to get her a noxious drug for the purpose of procuring a miscarriage, and gets the

As regards offences which are sudden and unpremeditated there can be no accessories before the fact (m)

If the person who procures the felony countermands his consent before the act is done, and the felony is nevertheless committed by the principal with knowledge of the countermand, the procurer is not liable as an accessory, but if the countermand is not communicated until after the act is done, the procurer is liable (o)

If a person procures another to commit a felony of one kind, and the principal knowingly and wilfully commits a felony of another kind, the procurer is not liable as an accessory (p)

(m) 1 Hale, P C 618, Jubilee's Case (1597), 4 Co Rep 43 b Where manslaughter ensues upon a sudden debate or affray, and there is no antecedent design to do an unlawful act, it seems that there cannot be an accessory before the fact to the manslaughter (ibid), and see R v Taylor (1875), L R. 2 O C R. 147, per MILLER, J at p 148 But if A aids and abets B to do an unlawful act, and B does it and in the furtherance of the unlawful design causes the death of C in such circumstances that it is manslaughter in B, it seems that A in such a case would be an accessory before the fact to the manslaughter (see Taylor's Case (1857), Dears & B 288, where the prisoner was convicted of manslaughter, although he was absent when the act was done which caused the death).

(n) R v Parker (1580), 2 Dyer, 186 a B counselled A, who was with child, to murder the child when it should be born, the child was born and was murdered by A and C It was held that B was liable as an accessory before the fact, although the procurement was before the birth, yet it continued afterwards (ibid), and see R v Banks (1873), 12 Cox, C C 393

(p) Fost 369 Thus, if A commands B to burn C's house, and B in so doing commits a robbery, A, though accessory to the burning, is not accessory to the robbery, for "that is a thing of a distinct and unsequential nature" (1 Hale, P C 617, 4 Bl Com 37) So if A counsels B to steal the goods of C on the road, and B breaks into C's house and steals them there, A is accessory to the stealing, but not accessory to the breaking into the house, because it is a felony of another kind (2 Plowd 476, 1 Hale, P C 617) A., wishing to get rid of his wife B, consulted C, who advised him to poison her and supplied poison for that purpose, A., in the absence of C, gave the poison to B, who did not take it but gave it to D, who took it and died, it was held that C was not an accessory to the murder of D. (Saunders' Case (1576), 2 Plowd 473)

(q) Thus if A advises B to murder C by poison and B kills C by any other means, or if A commands or advises B to murder C at one place and C commits the murder at another place, A. will be liable as an accessory, for the murder of C. was the object principally in contemplation (Fost 369, 370, 2 Hawk P. (e) 1 Hale, P C 618, 4 Bl Com 37 This applies to statutory felonies as well as to felonies at common law, although the statute creating the felony says nothing of accessories (1 Hale, P C 613, but see 1 Hale, P C 614, 2 Hawk P C, c 29, s 14) A person is an accessory after the fact who advises or assists a felon in his escape, or harbours and conceals in his house a felon under pursuit (2 Hawk P C, c 29, s 26, 1 Hale, P C 618, 619, 4 Bl Com 38, R v Lee (1804), 6 C & P 536) At common law the mere receipt of stolen goods by a person who knew that they were stolen did not of itself make such a person an accessory after the fact to the larceny, but if a person knowing that goods were stolen received them from a thief to keep for him, or to facilitate his escape or to furnish him with supplies, then such person was an accessory after the fact (1 Hale, P C 619) But now the receipt of stolen goods by a person who knows that they were stolen is a substantive felony in certain cases (see p 676, post), but there are still some cases in which a person who receives stolen property can only be prosecuted for a common law misdemeanour as an accessory after the fact (R v Payne, [1906] 1 K B 97, C C R, and p 680, post) Whoever rescues a felon from an arrest or supplies him with the means of breaking prison and escaping, or, semble, opposes the apprehension of a felon, is an accessory after the fact (1 Hale, P C 619, 621, 2 Hawk P C, c 29, s 27), but one who merely suffers the felon to escape is not an accessory (1 Hale, P C 619), nor one who relieves or maintains a felon who is bailed or gives medical aid to a felon or assists him in his trial (1 Hale, P C 332, 620) A man may be an accessory after the fact by receiving one who was accessory before as well as by receiving the principal (2 Hawk P C, c 29, s 1), and a man may be accessory after the fact to a larceny of his own goods or to a robbery on himself by harbouring or concealing the thief or assisting in his escape (Fost 123) To substantiate a charge of receiving a felon, it must be proved that the party charged did some act to assist the felon personally Being found in possession of a sum of money derived from the disposal of property stolen by the felon is not enough, if there is nothing to show that the party charged received any of the stolen property or did anything to assist the felon personally (R v Chapple (1840), 9 C & P 355) Where A stole a banknote, and B, knowing of the theft, made an unsuccessful attempt to change the note, and A went to a shop to purchase some goods in payment for which he tendered the note, B waiting outside, it was held that this was evidence of B's comforting and assisting A, as B helped A to get rid of the note and thus evade justice (R v Butterfield (1843), 1 Cox, C. If A commits the offence of sending a letter to B demanding money with menaces, and C after the letter has been sent assists A in the attempt to obtain money from B, semble C is not an accessory to the felony of sending the letter, the felony was complete when the letter was sent, and C, by assisting in the attempt to obtain money, does not aid A in concealing, or even in carrying out the felony which had been completed (R v Hansell (1849), 3 Cox, O C 597). (j) Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 94), s 2 This section applies both to a felony at common law and to any statutory felony (ibid), but only where a person procures or incites another to commit a felony and a felony is actually committed. If a person incites another to commit a felony and no felony is committed, the offence is a misdemeanour and not a felony (R v Gregory (1867), L R 1 C O R. 77) The section makes being an accessory before the fact to a felony a substantive felony The effect of the section is that an accessory before the fact may be indicted as such either along with the principal felon or after the principal felon has been convicted, or he may be indicted alone, although the person charged as the principal felon has not been convicted or is not amenable to justice (see R v Wallace (1811), 2 Mood. C C 200, decided upon the corresponding provision of the Criminal Law Act, 1828 (7 Geo. 4, c 64), s 9), R v Ashmall (1840), 9 C. & P 236, is inconsistent with R v Wallace, supra, and, it seems, is not law But if a person is indicted as an accessory before the fact and it turns out that he was in fact a principal, he should, it seems, be acquitted (R. v. Brown (1878), 14 Cox, C C 144, and see R. v Gordon (1789), 1 Leach, 515 The better course in all cases of accessories before the fact to a felony is, it seems, to indict them as principals (see R. v. James (1890), 24 Q. B D 439, C C R.). If A is indicted as the principal felon and B as an accessory before the fact, and A. is found guilty of a misdemeanour and B of aiding and abetting him, this amounts to a verdict that B. and C. are principals, as there are no accessories in misdemeanours (R v. Hapgood (1870), L R 1 C O R. 221, R. v Waudby, [1896] 2 Q. B. 482, C. C. R.). See further, as to the trial of accessories, Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 94), ss. 6, 7, 9.

whether he is convicted of a substantive felony or is convicted as an accessory (k)

537. An accessory after the fact to a felony is guilty of felony (l), he may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact to the principal felony together with the principal felon, or after the conviction of the principal felon, or he may be indicted and convicted of a substantive felony, whether the principal felon has or has not been previously convicted, or is or is not amenable to justice (m)

An accessory after the fact to murder is liable to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (n)

An accessory after the fact to any other felony, except where there is some other punishment specially provided, is liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (o)

538 Any person who aids, abets, counsels, or procures the commission of any misdemeanour is to be tried, indicted, and punished as a principal offender (p)

Attempt to commit a crime.

539 Every attempt to commit a felony or a misdemeanour, whether such felony or misdemeanour is created by statute or is an offence at common law, is itself a crime (q).

(k) See note (j), p. 257, ante

(m) Ibid. This section applies both to any felony at common law and to any statutory felony (ibid). The substantive felony of which an accessory after the fact can be convicted is that of being an accessory after the fact. A person who is indicted as a principal to a felony cannot be found guilty of being an accessory after the fact to the felony, the indictment must charge him with being an accessory after the fact (R v Fallon (1862), Le & Ca. 217). If a person is indicted as a principal for murder and others are indicted as accessories after the fact, and the principal is found guilty of manslaughter, the accessories may also be found guilty and convicted of manslaughter (R v Richards (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 311, O. O. R.)

Imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding two years is also the punishment fixed for accessories after the fact in offences under the Piracy Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 88), s. 4, Treason Felony Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 12), s. 8, Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 98, Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 56, Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 49, Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), s. 35, Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 67 (except in cases of murder, see supra)

This is only a declaration of the common law (Benford v Sims, [1896] 2 Q. B. 641, Du Croc v Lambourn, [1907] 1 K. B. 40, R v De Marny, [1907] 1 K. B. 388, C. O. R.). Semble, s. 8 of the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 94), only applies where the misdemeanour which is counselled etc. is actually committed (R v Gregory (1867), L. Any overt act immediately connected with the commission of an offence, and forming part of a series of acts which if not interrupted or frustrated would, if the offence could be committed, end in the commission of the actual offence, is, if done with a guilty intent, an attempt to commit the offence (r), whether the offence which is attempted is one that could or could not have been committed (s).

Merely to make preparations for the commission of an offence is not to attempt to commit the offence. An act, in order to be a criminal attempt, must be immediately, and not remotely, connected with and directly tending to the commission of an offence (t).

432 The attempt is a misdemeanour at common law, unless it has been made a statutory felony or a statutory misdemeanour. The following are statutory felonies: To administer poison etc with intent to commit murder, Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), ss 14, 15 (see p 593, post), to shoot at any person or attempt to discharge loaded arms with intent to maim etc, ibid, s 8 (see p 600, post), to attempt to choke etc with intent to commit an indictable offence (see p 602, post), to attempt to set fire to a building etc in such circumstances that it would be felony if the building etc were set fire to, Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), ss 8, 18, 26, 27, 44 (see p 773, post). The following are statutory misdemeanours: To attempt to conceal the birth of a child, Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 60 (see p 598, post), to attempt to commit an unnatural offence, ibid, s 62 (see p 539, post), to attempt to have unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl under sixteen, Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69) ss 4, 5 (1) (see p 615, post), to attempt to injure post office letter-boxes, Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48), s 61. An attempt to commit suicide is a misdemeanour at common law, it is not an attempt to commit murder within the Offences against the Person Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 15 (R v Duddy (1854), 6 Cox, C. C. 463). On an indictment charging a person with committing an offence the jury may find the defendant guilty of an attempt to commit that offence (Criminal Procedure Act, 1861 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 9, and see McPherson's Case (1857), Dears. & B 197). As to the punishment of a common law misdemeanour, see p. 410, post.

(s) Thus, if a person tries to pick someone's pocket he is guilty of an attempt to steal, though there is nothing in the pocket (R v Ring (1892), 61 L J (M. C.) 116, C. C. R., overruling R v Collins (1864), Le & Ca. 471, see R v Brown (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 357, C. C. R., R v Williams, [1893] 1 Q. B. 320, C. C. R.) If a woman, believing that she is with child and that she is taking a noxious thing, does, with intent to procure abortion, take a thing which is in fact harmless, she is guilty of an attempt to procure abortion (R v Brown (1899), 63 J. P. 790).

(t) Thus, it is not an attempt to commit an offence to procure the means to commit the offence, when such procuring is a neutral act and may be of an innocent nature, e.g., to buy matches for the sake of setting fire to a house is not an attempt to burn the house, but to light a match for the purpose of setting fire to a house might be a criminal attempt (R v Taylor (1859) 1 F & F 511). For a person to have in his possession the means of committing a crime, even though he has the intent to commit it, is not of itself an offence at common law, thus, it is not an offence at common law to have possession of obscene prints with intent to sell them, or of counterfeit coin with intent to utter it, or of coining instruments for the purpose of coining (R v Heath (1810), Russ. & Ry 184, R v Stewart (1814), Russ. & Ry 265 (disapproving of R v Sutton (1736), Lee temp Hard. 370), Duglake v R (1853), Dears C. C. 64). To have possession of counterfeit coin or of coining instruments is in certain cases a statutory offence (see p 516, post). As to keeping obscene publications for purpose of sale, see now Obscene Publications Act, 1957 (20 & 21

Conspiracy.

540. It is a crime for one person to incite or solicit or provoke another to commit a crime, although no crime is actually committed; such an incitement or soliciting or provoking is a form of attempting to commit a crime (a).

SUB-SECT 4 — Conspiracy.

541 If two or more persons agree together to do something contrary to law, or wrongful and harmful towards another person, or to use unlawful means in the carrying out of an object not otherwise unlawful, the persons who so agree commit the crime of conspiracy (b) So long as the design to do such Vict c 83), s 1 But it is an offence at common law to obtain and procure obscene prints with intent to sell them, or base coin with intent to utter it, or coining instruments with intent to make counterfeit coin (Dugdale v R (1853), Deans O O 61, Fuller's Case (1816), Russ & Ry 308, R v Roberts (1855), Deans O O 539), and, semble, to have possession of such things may be evidence of procuring them (Fuller's Case, supra) To deliver poison to an agent with directions to him to cause it to be administered in such circumstances that, if it were administered, the agent would have been the sole principal felon, is an attempt to cause poison to be administered, which, if done with a guilty intent, is made criminal by the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 14 As to attempts to discharge loaded firearms, see R v St. George (1840), 9 O & P 483, R v Lewis (1840), 9 O & P 523, R v Brown (1888), 10 Q B D 381, O O R., R v Duckworth, [1892] 2 Q B 83, O O R., R v Linnker, [1906] 2 K B 99, O O R., and p 600, post

If a misdemeanour is committed, the person who incites is guilty of the misdemeanour as a principal To incite to commit a felony, when no felony is committed, is generally a common law misdemeanour (R v Gregory (1867), L R 1 O O R 77) Incitement to mutiny is a statutory felony (Incitement to Mutiny Act, 1797 (37 Geo 3, c 70), s. 1, see p 464, post) The following are statutory misdemeanours To incite to murder (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 4, see p 595, post), to incite to commit a crime punishable under the Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48) (see s 69), to incite to commit an offence under the Official Secrets Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 52) (see s 3). To constitute the offence of inciting or soliciting there must be a communication which reaches some person whom the offender wishes to incite or solicit (R v Krause (1802), 66 J F 121). It is not necessary that the mind of the person whom it is sought to reach should be in any way influenced (ibid), but if a communication is sent with a view to solicit or incite, and does not reach the person for whom it is intended, the person sending it is guilty of the misdemeanour of attempting to solicit or incite (R v Ransford (1874), 13 Cox, O O 9, R v Banks (1873), 12 Cox, O O 393, R v Krause, supra) The offence of inciting or soliciting to commit a crime may be committed by publishing the incitement or solicitation in a newspaper addressed to the public in general (R v Most (1881), 7 Q B D 244, O O R.; R v Brown (1899), 63 J P 790) If the person who incites believes that a crime can be accomplished by certain means, he commits the crime of inciting, although the commission of the crime in the manner proposed is impossible (R v Brown, supra). A girl who is of such an age that unlawful carnal knowledge of her is a crime (see p. 616, post) does not commit any criminal offence in inciting a male person to have unlawful carnal knowledge of her (R v Tyrrell, [1894] 1 Q. B 710, O O R.)

(b) Quinn v. Leathem, [1901] A. C. 495, per Lord BRAMPTON, at p. 523;

an act rests in intention only it is not criminal, but as soon as two or more agree to carry it into effect, then their act becomes punishable (c).

The gist of the offence lies in the bare engagement and association to do an unlawful thing (i.e., a thing contrary to or forbidden by law), whether such thing be criminal or not (d), and whether any act other than the engagement or association be done by the conspirators or not (e).

An act which would not be criminal if done by one person may

O'Connell v R (1844), 11 Cl & Fin 155, H L, per TINDAL, C J, at p 233, R v Aspinall (1876), 2 Q B D 48, C A, per BRETT, J, at p 58, Mulcahy v R (1868), L R 3 H L 306, per WILLES, J, at p 317, R v Purnell (1881), 14 Cox, C C 508 (see stat. 33 Edw. 1 (Ordinacio de Conspiratoribus)). An agreement which is immoral or against public policy or in restraint of trade, or otherwise of such a character that the courts will not enforce it, is not necessarily a conspiracy. An agreement, to be a conspiracy, must be to do that which is contrary to or forbidden by law, as to violate a legal right or make use of unlawful methods, such as fraud or violence, or to do what is criminal (see Mogul Steamship Co v McGregor, Gow & Co, [1892] A. C 25, per Lord HALSBURY, at p 39, and see per Lord BRAMWELL, at p 46, R v Aspinall, supra, per BRETT, J, at p 59, compare R v Seward (1834), 1 Ad & El 706). It was said by Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C J, in pronouncing the judgment of the Court of King's Bench in R v Turner (1811), 13 East, 228, at p 231, that a conspiracy to commit a mere civil trespass, e.g., to go and sport upon another person's ground, is not an indictable offence. The decision in R v Turner was disapproved of in R v Rowlands (1851), 17 Q. B 671, per Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., at p 686, on the ground that the facts in R v Turner amounted to a conspiracy to commit an indictable offence, but in R v Rowlands, supra, no opinion was expressed on the dictum of Lord ELLENBOROUGH. If a conspiracy causes damage to the person against whom it is directed, such person has a civil remedy by action (see Savile v Roberts (1698), 1 Ld Raym. 374, and Mogul Steamship Co v McGregor, Gow & Co, supra, at p. 46). After the passing of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c 86) (see s 3), the law was different in regard to actions and prosecutions with respect to trade combinations, and an action for conspiracy might be brought where an indictment could not be brought (Quinn v Leatham, [1901] 1 Q 495), but this is no longer so (see Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 47), s. 1).

(c) Mulcahy v R, supra. The overt act in such a case consists of the agreement of the conspirators, which is an act in advancement of the intention which each of them has conceived in his mind (Mulcahy v R, supra, at p 328). A conspiracy to commit treason is therefore an overt act sufficient to support an indictment for treason (Mulcahy v R, supra).

(d) Savile v Roberts (1698), 1 Ld Raym 374, R v Spragg (1760), 2 Burr 993, Leith v Pope (1780), 2 Wm Bl 1327, at p 1329, Mogul Steamship Co v McGregor, Gow & Co (1889), 23 Q. B D 598, C A, per BOWEN, L J, at p 616, "Certain kinds of conduct not criminal in one individual may become criminal if done by combination among several", see also R v Warburton (1870), L R 1 C O R 274, per COCKBURN, C J, at p 276, R v Orman (1880), 14 Cox, C C 381, Mogul Steamship Co v McGregor, Gow & Co, [1892] A. C 25, per Lord HALSBURY, L C, at p 38, and per Lord BRAMWELL, at p 45. But in all such cases there must exist either an ultimate object of malice, or wrong, or wrongful means of execution involving elements of injury to the public or negativing the pursuit of a lawful object (Mogul Steamship Co v McGregor, Gow & Co, supra, per Lord FIELD, at p 52). No agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation and furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen is indictable as a conspiracy, if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime (Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (39 & 40 Vict. c 86), s 3, and see Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 47), ss 1, 5, and title TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS). be criminal if done by two or more in combination. But there is no conspiracy unless either the object of the combination is unlawful in the sense of being contrary to or forbidden by law, or illegal methods are resorted to in carrying it out (f).

A conspiracy to commit a crime is criminal, whether the crime is or is not committed (g), and whether the crime is punishable on indictment or on summary conviction (h).

A person may be guilty of conspiracy with others to commit a crime, although he himself could not be found guilty of the crime which he has conspired to commit (i).

542 A conspiracy to prevent, obstruct, pervert, or defeat the course of public justice is criminal (k). So is a conspiracy to raise discontent and disaffection among the subjects of the King, or to stir up jealousies, hatred, and ill-will between different classes of the King's subjects, or to promote amongst the King's subjects in one part of the United Kingdom feelings of ill-will and hostility

A conspiracy to commit treason may be charged as a substantive offence, or may be laid as an overt act (R v O'Donnell (1848), 7 State Tr (N s) 638, Mulcahy v R (1868), L R 3 H L 306, R v Davitt (1870), 11 Cox, C C 676). Some conspiracies have been made express statutory offences, e.g., a conspiracy to commit murder is a statutory misdemeanour (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s. 4, see p. 596, post), a conspiracy to cause an explosion of a nature likely to endanger life is a statutory felony (Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict. c 3), s. 3). So, although the mother of a child may not be prosecuted under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 100), s. 56, for taking her child out of the possession of a person having the lawful charge of the child, yet she may be indicted for conspiracy with someone else to take the child out of the possession of such person (R v Duguid (1906), 75 L J (K B) 470, C C R, R v Crossman, Ex parte Chetwynd (1908), 98 L T 760, see also R v Wakefield (1827), 2 Lew C C 1, R v Kohn (1864), 4 F & F 68).

Part II.—Original Criminal Jurisdiction(s).

SECT. 1.—Courts of Ordinary Criminal Jurisdiction.

SECT. 1.
Courts of Ordinary
Criminal
Jurisdiction.
Criminal
courts.

547. The courts which exercise original criminal jurisdiction, and which administer the ordinary criminal law in England, are the following —(1) The High Court of Parliament, (2) the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, (3) the Courts of Assize and of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery; (4) the Central Criminal Court, (5) the Courts of Quarter Sessions of the Peace, (6) the Courts of Justices of the Peace sitting in petty sessions. The first four are superior courts, the remaining two are inferior courts. All except the last are courts of record.

SUB-SECT 1 —High Court of Parliament.

548. The High Court of Parliament(t) is the supreme court in the kingdom, and has power to try "great and enormous offenders," whether lords or commoners, by the process of impeachment.

Parliament,

In impeachment the House of Commons, acting as the most solemn grand inquest of the kingdom, presents the offender for trial by the House of Lords, who sit as judges under the presidency of the Lord High Steward, if a peer is impeached, or of the Lord Chancellor or Speaker of the House of Lords, if a commoner is impeached(u).

ment.

The trial is conducted by managers appointed by the House of Commons, who draw up articles of impeachment, the trial is governed by the general principles of the criminal law, but matters of procedure are determined by the law of Parliament(v).

Procedure.

As to misprision of felony, see Proceedings under a Special Commission for the County of York (1813), 31 State Tr, the charge of THOMPSON, B., at p. 969, Williams v Bayley (1866), L. R. 1 H. L. 200, per Lord WESTBURY, at p 220, where it is said that the words "misprision of felony" have now "somewhat passed into desuetude." There is no modern instance of any prosecution either for misprision of treason or for misprision of felony, see p 503, post, as to infants, see note (g), p 240, ante.

Acts of attainder and of pains and penalties, although involving sentence and punishment, are legislative in form, the parties concerned, however, are admitted to defend themselves by counsel and witnesses before both Houses (Erskine May, Parliamentary Practice, 11th ed., 670). Such Acts are new laws, and not an execution of those already in being (4 Bl. Com 256).

Courts of Ordinary
Criminal
Jurisdiction.

King's Bench
Division of High Court of Justice.

The House of Lords has also original jurisdiction to try peers indicted for treason or felony (w).

SUB-SECT 2—High Court of Justice—King's Bench Division

549 The King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice (a) on its Crown side has cognisance of all criminal causes from treason down to the most trivial misdemeanour or breach of the peace (b). It is a permanent court of oyer and terminer, and is the principal court of criminal jurisdiction (c). In addition to an original jurisdiction to try indictments found by the grand jury of the counties of London and Middlesex (d) it has jurisdiction to try indictments removed into it by writ of certiorari, to try informations for certain misdemeanours, filed ex officio by the Attorney-General or by the Master of the Crown Office on the suggestion of a private individual (e).

The King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice is the only court before which a corporation can be tried on indictment, as only in that court can a corporation plead by attorney, and this is the only way in which a corporation can plead at all (f).

SUB-SECT 3—Courts of Assize, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery

courts.

550 The courts of assize and of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery are courts which are held at regular intervals under royal commissions in every county or assize district of England, except Middlesex, the City of London, and other counties and parts of counties within the district of the Central Criminal Court (g). Separate commissions are made out for each county and for each county of a city and assize district on each circuit.

The commission of oyer and terminer gives the persons named in

(c) It has a special and peculiar jurisdiction over treasons committed abroad (see R v Lynch (1903), Official Report), and over criminal and fraudulent acts committed by persons in public employment abroad in the exercise of their employment, and over the offence of wilfully neglecting or delaying to deliver or transmit writs for the election of members of Parliament (Parliamentary Writs Act, 1813 (53 Geo 3, c 89), s. 6) See also R v Eyre (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 487

(d) See R v Castro (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 350. It is not necessary to summon a grand jury, unless the Master of the Crown Office has before the fourth day of the sittings received notice of some business intended to be brought before them (Middlesex Grand Juries Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 52), and see Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 89 (3), R. (f) See R v Birmingham and Gloucester Rail Co (1840), 9 C. & P. 469. If an indictment is found elsewhere against a corporation, the proper course is to remove the indictment by certiorari (ibid). See also title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 392

(g) For a list of the circuits, see title BARRISTERS, Vol. II., p. 36. Assizes are held at certain towns on the Northern and North-Eastern circuits four times a year, on the other circuits three times a year. As to the dates for holding them, see Order in Council of 19th March, 1906, W. N.

PART II.—ORIGINAL CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

the commission authority to hear and determine all treasons, felonies and misdemeanours committed within the county, city, or district named in the commission, the commission of gaol delivery empowers the commissioners to try and deliver every prisoner who is in the gaol awaiting trial, or has been committed to the gaol, when they arrive at the circuit town (h).

SECT. 1.
Courts of Ordinary
Criminal
Jurisdiction.

The commission of assize relates partly to civil and partly to criminal matters, and enables the persons therein named to exercise any civil and criminal jurisdiction capable of being exercised by the High Court of Justice (i).

The King may grant special commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery to particular places, or for the trial of particular persons.

551. For London and the adjacent district a special court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery is provided in the Central Criminal Court (k).

Central
Criminal
Court.

SUB-SECT 4.—Courts of Quarter Sessions.

552 The courts of quarter sessions of the peace are inferior courts of record. In counties they are composed of justices, who sit together under the commission of the peace issued for the county to try certain indictable offences (l). In boroughs which have a separate court of quarter sessions, and which come under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (m), the court is held by the recorder, and he is the sole judge (n).

(h) 4 Bl Com 267. But see now the Assizes Relief Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 12), s. 1. A court of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery is not now required to deliver from gaol a person who has been committed for trial at quarter sessions, unless the High Court of Justice so directs, or unless the person is not tried at the next court of quarter sessions after his committal (ibid, s. 1, 3). Under the commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery the commissioners can proceed not only upon indictments found at the same assizes, but also upon indictments found at previous assizes and upon indictments found at quarter sessions which have been removed to the assizes, either because they are not triable at quarter sessions, or because the court of quarter sessions has made a special order for their removal. See p. 268 (note), post.

(i) See also Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 16 (11), s. 29, making assize courts a branch of the High Court. A commissioner of assize appointed in pursuance of s. 29 of the Act, when engaged in the exercise of any jurisdiction assigned to him in pursuance of the Act, is to be deemed to be a court of the High Court of Justice (see R v Dudley (1884), 14 Q. B. D. 271, 560, R v Parke, [1903] 2 K. B. 432, per WILLS, J., at p. 436). See also title COURTS, p. 72, ante.

For the present form of the commission of the peace in counties, see Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. II, Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, p. 10. See Keen v. R (1847), 10 Q. B. 928. ## SUB-SECT 5—Justices of the Peace.

553. The courts of justices of the peace sitting in petty sessions are inferior courts composed of justices sitting either as a court of summary jurisdiction or to hold a preliminary inquiry when a person is charged with an indictable offence. When so sitting justices act without the intervention of a jury (c).

the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will 4, c 76), s 1 and Schedules A and B). It has a court of quarter sessions of the peace, the judges of which are the Lord Mayor, Recorder, and aldermen (see Charter of Charles I of 1638, Charter of George II, 1741, Historical Charters etc of the City of London, pp 170 and 290), but their power to try indictments in felonies and misdemeanours of a serious nature was taken away by s 17 of the Central Criminal Court Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will 4, c 36). Indictments may still be preferred and found at these sessions (see s 19). The court chiefly sits now to hear appeals (see Pulling, Laws and Customs of the City of London, p 217, and see Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 41), s 40 (3), s 41, s 42 (13), s 100, definition of "quarter sessions").

The courts of quarter sessions have authority over all common law offences against the peace which are not expressly withdrawn from them (see Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1), and, it seems over all offences against any statute made concerning the peace (R v Alsop (1691), 4 Mod Rep 49 per HOLR, C J, at p 51). It seems a matter of some doubt to what extent they have jurisdiction over offences newly created by statute which do not affect the peace, and which do not expressly or by implication give them or deprive them of jurisdiction (see 4 Bl Com 268, R v Buggs (1694) 4 Mod Rep 379, R v Smith (1705), 2 Id Raym 1141, R v Farnington (1711), 1 Salk 406, Com Dig Justices of Peace, B, 3, R v Cock (1815), 4 M & S 71). If an indictment is found at quarter sessions for a crime which the court has no jurisdiction to try, the proper course is to transmit it to the assizes for trial there (see Assizes Relief Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 12), s 5, Central Criminal Court Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will 4, c 36), s 19), an indictment that is so transmitted must be tried at the assizes (R v Wetherell (1819), Russ & Ry 381), and no order can be made, or is needed, to require the clerk of the peace of the county, where the indictment is found, to return it to the clerk of assize (R v Wildman (1872), 12 Cox, C O 354).

It was held before the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 66), that the authority of quarter sessions, whether for a county or a borough, is not in law determined or suspended by the coming of the judges into the county under their commissions of assize, oyer and terminer, and general gaol delivery, but that it would be inconsistent and improper that courts of quarter sessions should be held concurrently with the assizes for the same county (Smith v R. (1849), 13 Q. B. 738), see 9 O & P. 790). But quære whether the effect of s 29 of that Act is not to alter the law, so that the authority of quarter sessions would be now determined or suspended (Smith v R., supra, at p 741), but as to quarter sessions in the district of the Central Criminal Court, see the Central Criminal Court Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will 4, c 36), s 21.

(c) See also titles COURTS, p 74, ante, MAGISTRATES. The powers of justices are defined by the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), and the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (11 & 12 Vict c 43, 20 & 21 Vict c 43, 26 & 27 Vict c 77, 42 & 43 Vict c 49, 47 & 48 Vict c 43, 62 & 63 Vict c 22), see title MAGISTRATES. Even indictable offences can in some cases be summarily dealt with by justices. If a child (i.e. a person who in the opinion of the court before whom he is brought is under the age of fourteen) is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an indictable offence other than homicide, the court may deal with it summarily, if it thinks it expedient and if the parent or guardian of the child when informed by the court of the right to have the child tried by a jury does not object (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), ss 10, 49, Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c 67), s. 128). There are similar powers to deal summarily with a "young person" (i.e. a person who in the opinion of the court before whom he is

The coroner's court is a common law court of record, the function of which in criminal matters is to inquire into the cause of the death of any person whose dead body is lying within the coroner's jurisdiction, if there is reasonable cause to suspect that such person has died a violent or an unnatural death or a sudden death the cause of which is unknown, or has died in prison, brought is of the age of fourteen and under the age of sixteen) charged with an indictable offence other than homicide, if the young person consents to be summarily dealt with (ibid, ss 11, 49, Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict c 22), s 2, Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 128) An adult (i.e. a person who in the opinion of the court is sixteen years old or more) who is charged with certain indictable offences may be dealt with summarily, if he pleads guilty, if he does not plead guilty but consents to be dealt with summarily, he may be dealt with summarily, if the value of the property taken or obtained or the damage done does not exceed 40s. The indictable offences in question are simple larceny or an offence punishable as simple larceny, larceny from the person, larceny by a clerk or servant, embezzlement, receiving stolen goods, aiding abetting etc the commission of simple larceny etc, attempting to commit simple larceny etc, obtaining or attempting to obtain a chattel etc by false pretences, unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to a wood (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), ss 12, 13, and Schedule, and Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict c 22), Schedule) A court of summary jurisdiction, with the consent of an adult, may deal summarily with an indecent assault upon a person who in the opinion of the court is under the age of sixteen years (Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c. 67), s 128 and Sched II. A court of summary jurisdiction, with the consent of the accused, may deal summarily with a charge against a proprietor, publisher, editor, or any person responsible for the publication of a newspaper, for a libel published in the newspaper, if the court is of opinion that, though the person charged is shown to have been guilty, the libel was of a trivial character and that the offence may be adequately punished by a fine not exceeding £50 (Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 60), s 5) Offences mentioned in the First Schedule of the Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 60), may also, with the consent of the accused, be dealt with summarily (s 2(2)) An adult who is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an indictable offence with which the court could deal summarily, if the adult pleaded guilty or consented, but who has been previously convicted, and is in consequence liable to punishment by penal servitude for the offence with which he is charged, cannot be summarily dealt with (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 14) As regards all indictable offences with which justices cannot deal summarily, they hear the witnesses, take their depositions in writing, and, if they decide to commit for trial bind the prosecutor and witnesses to attend at the court before which the prisoner is to be tried. In cases which may be tried either at quarter sessions or at assizes, the justices have thus the power of designating the court which is to try the accused (Assizes Relief Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 12), s 1, and see p 326, post) As regards offences not properly indictable with which the justices may deal summarily, a defendant may in cases where he is liable to imprisonment for a term exceeding three months claim to be tried by a jury, if a defendant so claim, he must be indicted (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 17) There are other cases of offences punishable on summary conviction in which a defendant may elect to be tried on indictment (see, e.g., Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 86), s 9, Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s 2 (6) In such a case a defendant must be told that he has a right to be tried by a jury, and if he is not told and is convicted, the conviction is bad (R v Cockshott (1898), 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 467; R v Beesby, [1909] 1 K B 849) R v Fowler (1895) 64 L. J. (M. C.) 9, was disapproved of in R v Beesby, supra

SUB-SECT. 2—Special Tribunals

Court of the King in Parliament

555 There are certain tribunals which only have jurisdiction over particular classes of persons. A man can only be tried by his peers or equals, and therefore a peer who is indicted for treason or felony or misprision of treason or felony can only be tried by peers (q).

If Parliament is sitting, the trial is in the court of the King in Parliament, if it is not sitting, it is before the court of the Lord High Steward of Great Britain, who is appointed pro hac vice only.

Where the trial is before the King in Parliament, a Lord High Steward is also appointed, but he is rather a speaker pro tempore or chairman of the court than judge (r).

Courts of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

556 The courts of the chancellors of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge have jurisdiction to try misdemeanours committed by resident members of the university and their servants.

If a prosecution for any such misdemeanour is commenced in the ordinary courts, the chancellor of the university may claim cognisance of the offence, and if the claim is made in due time and form, the case is withdrawn to the jurisdiction of the university court (s).

The chancellors of the universities, acting through their vice-chancellors, have also a special power of arresting and imprisoning females suspected of immorality and found consorting with undergraduates of the university (t).

(q) The privilege cannot be waived (3 Co. Inst. 30, Dacre's (Lord) Case (1534), Kel. 56). It extends to peers under age, Scotch and Irish peers, although they have no seat in the House of Lords, peeresses by birth and by marriage, and the widow of a peer, unless she is subsequently married to a commoner (1 Bl. Com. 262). The privilege does not extend to Bishops, who, even if they have a seat in the House of Lords, are not peers by virtue of their office, but are triable as commoners (Erskine May, Parliamentary Practice, 11th ed., p. 669). The indictment for treason or felony or misprision of treason or felony must first be found in a court of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery or a court of quarter sessions which has jurisdiction over the offence, and must then be removed by certiorari (3 Co. Inst. 28).

Ford* (1812), 15 East, 634, Ginnett v. Whittingham (1886), 16 Q. B. D. 761. As regards Cambridge, the right to claim cognisance is limited to proceedings in which a member of the university is a party (Cambridge Award Act, 1856 (19 Vict. c. xvii), s. 18). In cases of treason, felony and mayhem, if cognisance is claimed, the offence is tried in the court of the Lord High Steward of the university and a jury (see 4 Bl. Com. 275). 557. Criminal jurisdiction in regard to offences which are punishable, and offences which are not punishable, by the ordinary courts is exercised over persons subject to military law by courts-martial instituted under the Army Act, 1881 (u), but such persons are not exempt from the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts in cases where both the ordinary courts and the courts-martial have jurisdiction (v).

Courts of Special
Criminal
Jurisdiction

Courts-martial

Naval courts

As regards persons subject to naval law, a similar jurisdiction is exercised by courts constituted under the Naval Discipline Act, 1866 (w), but this jurisdiction does not exclude that of the ordinary civil courts (a).

Military and naval courts are not bound by the ordinary criminal law, except in so far as that law has been incorporated in the Acts which authorise the establishment of such courts (b). Such courts, however, are subject to the controlling authority of the High Court of Justice, which will be exercised if they exceed their jurisdiction (c).

558 The ecclesiastical courts, which exercise a jurisdiction of a criminal nature over the clergy and other members of the Church of England, do not administer the criminal law of the realm, but proceed according to the canon law or the special statutes which give these courts jurisdiction (d).

SECT. 3—The Limits of Criminal Jurisdiction

559 English courts exercise criminal jurisdiction (1) in respect of acts done by all persons, whether British subjects or aliens, within the territory of England, or on board a British ship on the high seas, or in places where great ships generally go, or on the open sea within the territorial waters of the King's dominions, (2) in respect of acts done by British subjects on land abroad, or on any ship on the high seas which is not British.

whom

criminal
courts
exercise
jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction in respect of acts committed in England is the jurisdiction of the common law. Jurisdiction in respect of acts committed on board a British ship on the high seas is the Admiralty jurisdiction. Jurisdiction in respect of acts committed elsewhere is derived from statute (e).

SECT 3

SUB-SECT 1—Common Law Jurisdiction.

The Limits of Criminal Jurisdiction.

Criminal jurisdiction at common law.

560 At common law the exercise of criminal jurisdiction is limited to crimes committed within the land of England with its ports and harbours, bays, gulfs and estuaries, and so much of the outer coast as extends to low-water mark (f) The courts of common law have always exercised jurisdiction over all persons who committed crimes within these limits, whether such persons were subjects of the King or resident aliens or mere casual and temporary alien visitors (g) In respect of acts done outside those limits there was no jurisdiction at common law (h)

Works, [1898] A. C. 200 The jurisdiction over acts done on a British ship is founded on the fiction that "a ship which bears a nation's flag is to be treated as a part of the territory of that nation" (R v Anderson (1868), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 161, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 163, and per BOVILL, C. J., at p. 166, Forbes v Cochrane (1824), 2 B. & C. 448, at p. 464, and at p. 467, but see R v Lesley (1860), Bell, C. C. 220, per ERLE, C. J., at p. 233, "although an English ship in some respects carries with her the laws of her country in the territorial waters of a foreign state, yet in other respects she is subject to the laws of that state as to acts done to the subjects thereof" The jurisdiction over British subjects in respect of acts committed abroad is purely statutory, and is based on the allegiance of the subject to the Sovereign, and on the power of the Sovereign, by reason of this allegiance, to pass laws for the regulation of the conduct of subjects wherever they are See Sussex Peerage Case (1844) 11 Cl. & Fin. 85, H. L., per TINDAL, C. J., at p. 146 Apart from statute the general principle of criminal jurisprudence is that the quality of an act depends on the law of the place where it is done (A-G for the Colony of Hong Kong v Kwok-a-Sung (1873), L. R. 5 P. C. 179, per MELLISH, L. J., at p. 199)

(f) R v Keyn (1876), 2 Ex. D. 60, C. C. R., at p. 162 England includes Wales (stat. 27 Hen. 8, c. 26), but does not include Scotland, Ireland, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands See Re Mitchell, Ex parte Cunningham (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 418 C. A.

(g) R v Keyn, supra, at p. 160

(h) Ibid., at p. 168 For the purposes of criminal jurisdiction, an act may be regarded as done within English territory, although the person who did the act may be outside the territory, for instance, a person who, being abroad, procures an agent to commit a crime in England is deemed to commit an act in England (R v Brisac (1803), 4 East, 164, Mr Justice Johnson's Case (1805), 29 State Tr. 81, at pp. 462, 499) If a person, being outside England, sends to England by post or otherwise with a criminal intent a fraudulent document or a libellous or obscene publication, he commits an act in England for which he is amenable to English jurisdiction (R v Muntion (1793), 1 Esp. 62, R v Oliphant, [1906] 2 K. B. 67, C. C. R., R v Burdett (1820), 4 B. & Ald. 95, R v. De Marny, [1907] 1 K. B. 388, C. C. R.) Such a person, even though a foreigner, can be tried if he comes to England (R v De Marny, supra, R v Oliphant, [1906] 2 K. B. 67, C. C. R.) If a person, being outside English territory, were intentionally to fire at and kill a person in English territory in such a manner that the act amounts to murder, the person who fired could be tried for murder in England (R v Coombes (1780), 1 Leach, 388, and see R v Rogers (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 28, C. C. R., per FIELD, J., at p. 34), Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 10 (but see Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Badische Chemical Works, [1898] A. C. 200, at p. 204) Quære, whether the same rule would apply to manslaughter by negligence (see R v Keyn (1876), 2 Ex. D. 63, C. C. R., at p. 234). A person who makes a false representation outside England, and by means of such representation obtains goods in England, may be tried in England for the crime of obtaining goods by false pretences (R v Ellis, [1899] 1 Q. B. 230, C. C. R.) If the false representation is made by a letter written and posted in England, but sent to an address abroad, and money is by means of such a letter sent from abroad to and received in England, a crime is committed which is triable in England (R v. Holmes (1883), 12 Q. B. D.

SUB-SECT 2.—Admiralty Jurisdiction.

SECT. 2.

The Limits
of Criminal Jurisdiction.Admiralty
jurisdiction.

561. All acts done on a British ship, either on the high seas or in places where great ships go, are subject to the Admiralty jurisdiction, whether such acts are done by British subjects or by foreigners (i)

An act done on the high seas, but not on an English ship, is not, apart from statute, the subject of Admiralty jurisdiction, except in the case of piracy jure gentium, which is triable and punishable everywhere, no matter where or by whom it is committed (k).

23, C O R.), see p 281, post If an act is done by a foreigner outside England, and neither in English territorial waters nor on a British ship, the foreigner is not amenable to English criminal jurisdiction, although some consequence of the act may take place in England, e g., if a foreigner strikes someone abroad and the person struck comes to England and dies of the blow, there is no crime which is cognisable in England (R v Lewis (1857), 1 Dears & B 182, and see R v Depardo (1807), 1 Taunt. 26, R v Mutton (1836), 7 C & P 458) § 10 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 100), has apparently no effect in a case of this kind (see note (q) on p 289, post) But the case will be otherwise where the act is a continuous one, some part of which is deemed to be performed in this country (see R v De Murny and other cases cited supra) An alien enemy who comes into the realm in a hostile way cannot be tried for treason, for the essence of that crime is violation of the allegiance which a subject or resident or commorant alien owes to the Sovereign, but which an alien enemy does not owe (Perkin Warbeck's Case (1500), 7 Co Rep 6 b) But an alien enemy who is a prisoner of war may, it seems, commit crimes for which he is triable and punishable here (see Molier's Case (1758), Post 188, n, and the observations of Lord ELLENBOROUGH, O J, in R v Johnson (1806), 6 East, 583, at p 593, and Sauvageot's and Accot's Cases, cited in R v Depardo, supra, at p 32

(k) R v Keyn (1876), 2 Ex D 63, C O R., at p 168, A-G for Colony of Hong Kong v Kwok-a-Sing (1873), L R. 5 P O. 179 See for piracy jure gentium, p. 523, post.

SECT. 3.
The Limits
of Criminal

Trial by commissioners

562. As regards so much of the coast of England as is between high and low water mark, and as regards the estuaries of English rivers and land-locked bays inter fauces terræ, the common law and the Admiralty have concurrent jurisdiction (l).

563 Crimes subject to Admiralty jurisdiction were originally tried by the Court of the Admiral, according to the civil law (m), but the criminal jurisdiction of such court was transferred by the Offences at Sea Act (n) to commissioners appointed by the King

Such commissioners were to try offences committed within the Admiralty jurisdiction in such county as their commissions might direct, and "according to the common course of the laws of the realm used for such offences when done upon the land within the realm" (o) It is not now the practice to issue these commissions, as offences committed within Admiralty jurisdiction may now be tried by the ordinary superior criminal courts (p)

 crimes subject to Admiralty
 jurisdiction
 in ordinary
 criminal
 courts

564 The Central Criminal Court has power to try offences committed on the high seas and other places within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty (q), and the justices of assize and other commissioners holding a court under any of the King's commissions of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery may try any person for criminal acts done within the Admiralty jurisdiction, if such person is committed to, or imprisoned in, any gaol in any county or franchise within the limits of their commissions (r)

(r) Admiralty Offences Act, 1841 (7 & 8 Vict c 2), s 1 The Admiralty Offences Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c. 38), gave justices of the peace power to take examinations concerning offences committed within the Admiralty jurisdiction and to cause persons who committed such offences to be apprehended. The Admiralty Offences Act, 1841 (7 & 8 Vict c 2), s 3, empowers justices to commit such offenders to the prison to which a person would be committed who committed an offence on land within the jurisdiction of the justices (see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), s 2). SECT. 2.
The Limits
of Criminal
Jurisdiction.

Wallace (1841), 2 Mood C C 200 Persons who have committed offences within the Admiralty jurisdiction may be tried in English colonies, or in places abroad outside the British dominions, where the King has power of jurisdiction (see Offences at Sea Act, 1806 (46 Geo 3, c 54) Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict c 96), s 1, and Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 37), s 6) All offences against property or persons committed either ashore or afloat out of the King's dominions by any master, seaman or apprentice who, when the offence is committed, is, or within three months previously has been, employed in any British ship, are punishable and triable as if they were offences committed within the Admiralty jurisdiction, Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 687, and see R v Dudley (1884), 14 Q B, 1) 273, at p 281, which decided, under the corresponding section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict c 104), that the judge of assize sitting at Exeter had jurisdiction to try seamen formerly belonging to a British ship which had been wrecked who committed murder in an open boat on the high seas. Any court in the King's dominions which could try an offence committed on board a British ship within the limits of its ordinary jurisdiction may try a British subject charged with committing an offence on board any British ship on the high seas or in any foreign port or harbour or on board any foreign ship to which he does not belong, or an alien charged with committing an offence on board a British ship on the high seas, if such person is found within the jurisdiction of the court (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 686, see R v Lopez (1858), 1 Dears & B 525, and R v Menham (1858), 1 F & F 369) The last-mentioned section applies, even although the prisoner is a foreigner and has been brought within the jurisdiction of the court against his will (R v Lopez, supra) If a person on a British ship in the territorial waters of a foreign state, acting under the lawful orders of the foreign state, commits an act in respect of subjects of the state which would be criminal but for such orders (e.g., if he assaults and arrais such subjects), such person cannot be prosecuted in an English criminal court for such an act, so long as it is covered by the authority of the foreign state, but if such an act is continued outside the jurisdiction of the state (e.g., by bringing the subjects of the foreign state in confinement to England), then such person can be punished in respect of so much of the act as is done outside the territory of the foreign state (R v. Lesley (1860), Bell, C C 220, see Dobree v Namer (1836), 2 Bing (N C) 781) The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s. 686, does not apply to a foreigner on a foreign ship committing a negligent act which causes a collision with a British ship and the death of a person on board the British ship in consequence of such collision, such an act is not "an offence committed on board a British ship" (R v Keyn (1876), 2 Ex D 61, C C R.). "Ship" means for the purposes of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), every description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars (s 742) Ss 686 and 687 of the Act apply to all British ships whether registered or not (ibid, s 72, R v Allen (1866), 10 Cox, C C 405, R v. Seberg (1870), L. R. 1 C C R 264) The fact that a ship carries the British flag and is registered as a British ship is prima facie evidence that it is a British ship, but if the ship is in fact owned by an unqualified person, e.g., a foreigner, it is not a British ship, and the English courts have no jurisdiction to try an offence committed by a foreigner on board such a ship (R. v. Bornsen (1865), L. & Ca 545).

upon the land in England, and may be tried in any county in England in which the offender is apprehended or is in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if they had been actually committed in that county or place (b)

566. Acts done on the open sea, within the territorial waters of the King's dominions, but not on a British ship, are not within common law jurisdiction, nor were they formerly within Admiralty jurisdiction (c). But such acts, although committed on board of, or by means of, a foreign ship have been brought by statute (d) within Admiralty jurisdiction, and subject to certain conditions (e) are triable as if they had been committed on a British ship

(b) See R v Pil (1862), 1 L. & C. 231, which decided that a person who stole goods on a British ship on the high seas between Madras and Point de Gallo was rightly tried under s 115 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), in the court of quarter sessions in the borough of Southampton, where he was apprehended

(c) See R v Hryn (1876), 2 F. & D. 63, *O. O. a modern instance of a trial under stat 35 Hen 8, c 2, in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, see R v Lynch, [1903] 1 K B. 444, where a British subject was tried at the Royal Courts of Justice, London, for treason committed in South Africa. Treasons committed in Scotland are triable in Scotland, and not, it seems, in England (Treason Act, 1708 (7 Ann c 21), s 4), unless by virtue of a special statute (see R v Kinloch (1748), 18 State Tr 395, R v Hardie (1820), 1 State Tr (N S) 609, at p 661). Treasons committed by a native of Scotland upon the high sea or in any place out of Great Britain are triable either in Scotland or in such shire, stewartry, or county of Great Britain as shall be assigned by the King's Commission (Treason Act, 1708 (7 Ann c 21), s 7). For instances of persons tried in England for treasons committed in Ireland, see Macquarr's (Lord) Case (1645), 4 State Tr 653, Plunket's Case (1681), 8 State Tr 447, 3 Co Inst. 11. (g) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 9. See R v Nelson (1867), reported by F Cockburn. An alien while resident here is, it seems, a subject of the King within the meaning of this statute, as far as respects his liability for acts done in England, but not for acts done abroad (R v Bernard (1858), 8 State Tr (N S) 887, per Lord CAMPBELL, C J, at p 1055, see Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 4). As to a conspiracy or a solicitation to murder an alien who is outside the King's dominions, see Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 4, which provides for most of the cases which were raised, but not decided, in R v Bernard, supra. It seems that to constitute an offence under that section some act must be done in England. An English subject who conspires abroad with someone in England to commit one of the acts prohibited by the section might, it seems, be tried in England, if his fellow-conspirator did any overt act in England in pursuance of the conspiracy (see Greaves, Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, 2nd ed, p 37). A person who has been tried and convicted or acquitted by a court of competent jurisdiction in a foreign country cannot in respect of the same offence be tried again here (R v Roche (1776), 1 Leach, 134). Originally on every trial some of the jury had to be of the same hundred, or sometimes of the same parish or neighbourhood, in which the thing was supposed to be done (ibid) See generally as to venue, *British South Africa Co. v. (o) The area of jurisdiction must be either a county, an assize district, the

SECT. 4.

Venue.Common law ruleSUB-SECT 1 —At Common Law

582 The common law rule is that the proper venue for the trial of a crime is the area of jurisdiction in which the place is where the crime was committed (p).

Statutory provision is made for the trial of certain crimes (q) before courts other than those within the area of whose jurisdiction such crimes were committed, but, in the absence of statutory provision, the common law rule governs the venue

a crime.

583 The locality of a crime varies with the nature of the crime. If the crime is an act of omission, the place where the crime is committed is the place where the act which is omitted ought to have been done (r). If the crime consists of an act or acts of commission which is or are done in one place, that is the place where the crime is committed (s) district of the Central Criminal Court, or a city or borough where such borough has a separate court of quarter sessions. The venue is thus laid —In the case of an indictment found by the grand jury of a county, "County of Worcester to wit," of an assize district, "County of Warwick, Birmingham Division, to wit" (see Order in Council of 26th June, 1884, Stat R & O Rev, VII, 791), in the case of an indictment found at the Central Criminal Court (the district of which for purposes of venue is to be deemed to be one county), "Central Criminal Court to wit" (Central Criminal Court Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will 4, c 36), s 3), in the case of an indictment found by the grand jury of a city or borough which is a county of itself, "County of the City of Worcester to wit" or "County of the Town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne to wit", in the case of an indictment found by the grand jury of a borough which is not a county of itself, "Borough of Wolverhampton to wit"

(r) R v Milner (1846), 2 Car & Ku 310. So in the case of an act of commission, such as embezzlement, when there is no evidence of embezzlement except non accounting, the venue may be laid in the place where the non accounting occurred, but this does not apply where there is distinct evidence of misappropriation elsewhere, for then the offence is triable in either place (see R v Davison and Gordon (1855), 7 Cox, C C 158, per ALDERSON, B., at p 162, R v Murdoch (1851), 5 Cox, C C 360, C O R., R v Taylor (1803), Russ & Ry 63, R v Rogers (1877), 3 Q B D 28, C. O. R., R v Hobson (1803), Russ. & Ry 56, R v Treadgold (1878), 14 Cox, C C 220, C O R.

(s) Thus where the charge is one of perjury in swearing a false affidavit, the crime is complete by the act of swearing, and the place where that act is done is the place where the crime is committed. If the affidavit is used in another place, such use is no part of the crime of perjury, but is an independent crime for which the offender may be tried in the place where the affidavit is used, the venue must be laid where the false oath is taken, not where the affidavit is used, the crime is complete, even if no use is made of the affidavit (R v Crossley (1797), 7 Term Rep 310). If perjury is committed within the limits of a city which is a county of itself on the trial of an issue before a jury of the county at large, the offence is triable before a jury either of the city or of the county at large (R v Gough (1781), 2 Doug (K B) 791, R v Jones (1833), 6 C & P 137). The crime of bigamy is committed in the place where the second marriage took place (1 Hale, P. C 693), although, in order to prove the crime, evidence must be given of the first marriage, which may have been solemnised elsewhere. See further as to the venue in bigamy, Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s 57, and p. 284, note (c), post. As regards forgery, the fact that the accused was seen in the place where the forged document was uttered in company with the utterer is evidence that the forgery took place there and justifies the venue

SECT. 4.
Venue.

A criminal enterprise may consist of a continuing act which is done in more places than one or of a series of acts which are done in several places. In such cases, though there is one criminal enterprise, there may be several crimes; and a crime is committed in each place where a complete criminal act is performed, although such act may be only a part of the enterprise (t).

584 What constitutes a complete criminal act is determined by the nature of the crime. Thus, as regards continuing acts, in the case of sending by post or otherwise a libellous or threatening letter, or a letter to provoke a breach of the peace, a crime is committed, both where the letter is posted or otherwise sent, and also where it is received, and the venue may be laid in either place (a).

In obtaining money etc. by false pretences the gist of the offence is the obtaining, and the crime is committed where the money is obtained, and not where the false pretences are made (b).

If money obtained by false pretences is sent by letter at the request of the accused, the crime is committed both where the letter is posted and where it is received (c).

As regards simple larceny, if property is stolen in one county and

being laid there (R v Corah (1827), 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 658—659, but see Parke's Case (1796), 2 Leach, 775).

(t) Many of these cases are provided for by statute (e.g., Criminal Law Act, 1828 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 12), by which if a felony or misdemeanour is begun in one county and completed in another it may be tried in either (R v Jones (1830), 1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 5, and p. 285, post), but there are many cases to which the statute is not applicable, e.g., where some of the acts relating to a crime are done out of England (see R v Peters (1886), 16 Q. B. D. 636, O. C. R., R v Ellis, [1899] 1 Q. B. 230, O. C. R.). In such cases the venue is determined by the rules of the common law.

(a) R v Burdett (1820), 4 B. & Ald. 95, R v Giraud (1776), 2 East, P. O. 1120, R v Esser (1767), 2 East, P. O. 1125, R v Williams (1810), 2 Camp. 506, Trial of the Seven Bishops (1688), 12 State Tr. 183, 354, R v Watson (1808), 1 Camp. 215, R v Johnson (1805), 7 East, 65.

(b) R v Ellis, [1899] 1 Q. B. 230, O. C. R., R v Buttery cited in R v Burdett, supra, at p. 179, and see R v Holmes (1883), 12 Q. B. D. 23, O. C. R.

(c) R v Jones (1850), 1 Den. 551, R v Leech (1856), 7 Cox, C. O. 100. But where the charge is that of attempting to obtain money etc. by false pretences, the locality of the crime is, it seems, the place where the false pretences are made. If goods are obtained by false pretences in one county and removed into another, the trial must be in the county where the goods were obtained (R v Stanbury (1862), Le. & Ca. 128). An undischarged bankrupt commits the offence of obtaining credit to the amount of £20 or upwards under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 31, in the place where he obtains goods on credit (R v Dawson (1888), 16 Cox, C. O. 556, O. C. R.). If an undischarged bankrupt living at N, in England, writes to a person in Ireland and orders goods to be sent on credit to N from Ireland, and the goods are so sent and are received in N, the offence is committed in N (R v Peters, supra, and see R v Juby (1886), 55 L. T. 788, O. C. R., R v Ellis, supra). A defendant by false pretences in letters written in London and sent to Paris induced stockbrokers in Paris to give him credit and to buy stock for him, no scrip or shares were delivered to him, but in some cases the stock was sold at a profit and he received the difference between the prices at which the stock was bought and those at which it was sold; in other cases the stock bought on his account was not sold, and the stockbrokers in Paris had to pay for it, it was held that he had obtained credit in London, and could be tried in the Central Criminal Court (R v Furwitz, O. C. O. Sessions Papers, November, 1906, 22).

Venue.

carried by the thief into other counties, the venue may be laid either in the county where he originally stole the goods or in any county into which he takes them animo furandi, and this is so even though the removal into one county may be after a considerable interval of time (d), but this rule does not apply where the stolen property is taken into a county by the thief after his arrest in the company of and with the consent of the constable who has charge of him (e).

The rule that a person who steals property in one county and removes it into another may be tried in the second county only applies to simple larceny, and does not apply to compound larceny, i. e., larceny with some aggravating circumstance, as taking from the house or person (f). A person who commits compound larceny in one county and carries the stolen property into another county cannot be convicted of compound larceny in the second county, but may, it seems, be indicted and tried in the second county for simple larceny (g).

The offence of receiving stolen property is committed and triable in the place where the property is received (h).

The offence of abduction is committed not only in the county in which the woman or girl is originally taken, but also in any county into which she is carried by force (i).

A person who in one place fires a shot or throws a missile with criminal intent and kills or injures a person who is in another place commits the crime in the place where the injury is received (j).

(e) R v Simmonds (1834), 1 Mood C C 408. If the nature of property stolen in one place is altered, and the property in its altered state is carried by the thief into another place, the thief is guilty of larceny in the second place as well as in the first, but the indictment if presented in the second place would be differently expressed from an indictment presented in the first place, e. g., if a thief stole a live turkey in one place and carried it to another and killed it there, or stole a brass furnace in one place and carried it to another and broke it into pieces there, the indictment if presented in the first place would allege that he stole a "live turkey" or a "brass furnace," but if presented in the second place that he stole a "dead turkey" or "pieces of brass" (R v Edwards (1822), Russ & Ry 497, R v Holloway (1823), 1 O & P 127). So, if several jointly steal in the county of A and then divide the goods, and each afterwards carries his separate share into the county of B, they may be tried for a joint felony in the county of A, but not in the county of B, if tried in the county of B, they must be tried for separate felonies (R v Barnett (1818), 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 284).

Nor does the rule apply to a statutory larceny which is not a larceny at common law. If the original taking is only a statutory felony, the subsequent possession cannot be considered as larceny (R v Millar (1837), 7 O & P. 665). See as to Post Office offences, p. 644, post. The rule does not apply to false pretences (R v Stanbury (1862), L. & C. 128).

Venue
Treason

Conspiracy may be tried in the place where the conspirators agreed to do the wrongful act which is the object of the conspiracy, but as the place of agreement is often unknown, conspiracy is generally a matter of inference deduced from criminal acts of the accused persons which are done in pursuance of a common criminal purpose, and are often not confined to one place, a charge of conspiracy may consequently be laid in any county where one of these criminal acts is committed, although no act may have been done by some of the accused in that county, yet if all the accused had a common criminal purpose and jointly co-operated in forwarding it in different counties, the venue may be laid in any county in which overt acts are done by some one of them in prosecution of the conspiracy (l)

Conspiracy.

A person who procures the commission of an offence commits the offence in the place where the act is done the commission of which he has procured, although he himself never was in that place (m).

Procuring.

If a person incites another to commit an offence, but the offence is not actually committed, the person who incites is guilty of a crime, which is triable, it seems, where the incitement took place (n)

SUB-SECT. 2—Statutory Provisions

585 Where the common law rule as to venue is relaxed, and provision is made by statute that a crime may be tried in some county or place other than that in which it was committed, the venue to be laid in the margin of the indictment is the area of jurisdiction of the court in which the indictment is found (a).

If the shot was fired or the missile thrown but no one was hit, the offence of attempting to do the injury would be committed, it is submitted, in the place where the person was who fired the shot or threw the missile.

which the offender is taken (s 28) An accessory either before or after the fact to a felony wholly committed in England may be tried by any court which has jurisdiction to try the principal felony or any felonies committed in any county or place in which the act by which the person becomes an accessory is committed, in every other case the accessory may be tried by any court which has jurisdiction to try the principal felony or any felonies committed in any county or place in which the accessory is apprehended or in custody, whether the principal felony has been committed on the sea or on the land, or begun on the sea and completed on the land, or begun on the land and completed on the sea, and whether within or without the King's dominions, or partly within and partly without the King's dominions (Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 94), s 7, see R v Wallace (1941), Car & M 200) If a person within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty becomes accessory to any felony, "the venue shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in the county or place in which he is indicted" (Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 94), s 9) If a statute authorises the trial of a crime in a county where the accused is in custody, and he is committed to take his trial in any particular county, but is allowed out on bail, he may be tried in that county, though he is not in confinement, till he surrenders in discharge of his bail (R v Smythes (1849), 1 Don 498)

(d) An offence in connection with the slave trade may be tried either where the offence was committed or in Middlesex, or in any place in which the person guilty of the offence may for the time being be, where any such offence is commenced at one place and completed at another, the offence may be tried at either place If a person being in one place is accessory to or aids and abets any such offence committed in another place, he may be tried either where the offence was actually committed or where the offender was at the time of his being accessory, aiding or abetting (Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c 88), s 26) Any offence under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 38 Vict. c 60), for the purpose of giving jurisdiction is deemed to have been committed either in the place in which it was actually committed or in any place in which the offender may be (s 684), these provisions apply to a prosecution under the Behring Sea Award Act, 1894 (57 Vict. c 2), s 1 (2), (5), and Sched II Similar provisions are to be found in the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c 90), ss 16, 17 It is stated in some authorities that an indictment for extortion may be laid in any county under 31 Eliz c 5, s 4 (see 2 Starkie, Criminal Pleading, 2nd ed., 611, n, but there was a doubt whether s 4 applied to indictments (2 Chitty, Criminal Law, 293, n), ss 2, 3, 4, and 6 of the statute were repealed as to civil proceedings by the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 59), but remain in force as to criminal pleadings The proper course, it seems, would be to lay the indictment for extortion in the county where any act of extortion was committed If a person commits an offence against the Customs Acts in any place on the water not being within any county of the United Kingdom, or if the revenue officers have any doubt whether such place is within the boundaries of any such county, he is triable in the place in which the offence was actually committed or where the offender may be or be brought (Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c 36), s 229) An offence committed by a British subject on a British ship on the high seas, or in any foreign port or harbour or on board any foreign ship to which he does not belong, or an offence committed by an alien on board any British ship on the high seas, may be tried before any court of justice in the King's dominions, if the offender is found within the jurisdiction of the court, and if the court would have had cognisance of the offence, had it been committed within the limits of its ordinary jurisdiction (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c 60), s 686, see R. v. Lopez (1868), Dears. & B 525).

(e) Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 64), s. 12. One effect of the Act is to give adjoining counties concurrent jurisdiction over an area of 1000 yards through the centre of which runs the boundary. The Act applies to all offences

587 An indictment for an offence committed within the county of a city or town corporate, except in London, Westminster, or the borough of Southwark, may be preferred to the grand jury of the next adjoining county at the sessions of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery and may be tried there (j) If an indictment for such an offence has been found by the grand jury of the county of a city or town, any court of oyer and terminer holden for such county of a

even to those, e.g., burglary, which are local in their character (R v Ruck (1829), 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 46) The offence may be laid and tried in either county, but where it is laid, there it must be tried, it cannot be laid in one county and tried in another (R v Mitchell (1842), 2 Q B 636) The distance of 500 yards is to be measured geometrically from the place where the offence is committed to the nearest point of the boundary, and not along the road (R v Wood (1841), 5 Jur 225), the distance, it seems, is to be measured on a map without regard to the curvature or inequalities of the surface of the earth (see Moufflet v Cole (1872), 42 L J (Ex) 8, Ex Ch., and compare Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 50), s 231, Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 69), s 34) The Act does not apply to trials in limited jurisdictions (e.g., in boroughs which are not counties of themselves), but only to counties, thus, an offence committed within 500 yards of the boundary of a borough which is not a county of itself cannot be tried at the quarter sessions for the borough (R v Welsh (1827), 1 Mood C C 175) The words "begun in one county and completed in another" do not make it necessary that there should be active and continuing agency in the person who commits the offence, thus, where a blow was struck in the county of Worcester, and the person struck died in the city of Worcester, which is a county of itself, it was held that the offender could be tried for manslaughter in the city (R v Jones (1830), 1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 5) As regards detached parts of a county which are surrounded in whole or in part by another county, the Counties (Detached Parts) Act 1839 (2 & 3 Vict c 82), s 1, gives the justices of the county which surrounds the detached part jurisdiction to act over that part, and the effect is that a crime committed in such a detached part may be tried in the county which surrounds it or in the county to which the detached part belongs (R v Loader (1840), 1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 7, note (w), Dickinson's Quarter Sessions, 6th ed., 209) As to the transference of outlying parts of a county to another county, see County Police Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 88), s 2, as explained by 21 & 22 Vict c 68, s 2 (repealed by Statute Law Revision Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict c 19))

The attendance of an accused person before justices is secured either by summons or by arrest, either under or without a warrant (h). Summonses and warrants of arrest are issued by a justice on an information being laid before him. A warrant of (h) For the procedure in reference to summonses and arrests with regard to an indictable offence, see the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), ss 1, 2. Summonses, warrants, and arrests are mere machinery for securing the attendance of an accused person. The invalidity of any of these preliminary steps will not affect the jurisdiction of justices, if the accused person appears and the charge is one which the justices have power to investigate (R v Hughes (1870), 4 Q. B. D 614, O O R.).

arrest may issue on a summons being disobeyed, or may issue in the first instance

A summons is an order in writing, signed by a justice and directed to an accused person requiring him to attend before a justice or justices to answer a criminal charge (i)

A warrant of arrest is an order, also in writing under the hand and seal of a justice or other person in authority, addressed to a police constable by name, or by the name of his office, and to all other peace officers in a certain area, commanding him or them to arrest an accused person and bring him before the justices sitting in a specified place, to answer the charge which is referred to in the warrant (k)

600. Summonses or warrants may be issued by a justice of the peace for any county, city, borough or place in England or Wales, when an information has been laid before such justice that any

(i) As to the form, see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), Schedule, Form O. It is served by a constable or other peace officer upon the party to whom it is directed by delivering it to such party personally, or if he cannot conveniently be met with, then by leaving it with some person for him at his last or most usual place of abode (ibid, s 9)

(k) As to the form of a warrant in the case of an indictable offence, see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), Schedule, Form B. Warrants, besides being issued by justices, may be granted in the case of treason by a Secretary of State (R v Kendal (1695), 1 Ld Raym 65, R v Despard (1798), 7 Term Rep 736, see Leach v Money (1765), 19 State Tr 1001). Any judge of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of a person against whom a charge is made on oath of felony (1 Chitty, Criminal Law, 36, and see Bail Bonds Act, 1808 (48 Geo 3, c 58), s 1). Under s 380 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), a warrant may be issued by a superintendent (i.e., a shipping master or other officer of a local marine board, see ibid, ss 246 and 742) or by the principal Board of Trade officer at a port or district or by his deputy, on the information made, if the officer so require, on oath, for the apprehension of any seaman or apprentice charged with the offence of desertion, absence without leave, wilful disobedience, continued breach of duty, or unlawful combination. A warrant must in general direct the arrest of a particular person by name, or by description, if his name is unknown. But a justice of the peace may, at common law, issue a search warrant authorising a search in any house etc. for stolen goods and the arrest of any person found in possession of such goods (see p 309, post). In other cases a general warrant (e.g., a warrant to seize the "authors, printers and publishers" of a certain specified libel) is bad at common law (Leach v Money (1765), 19 State Tr 1001 at p 1027, Entick v Carrington (1766), 19 State Tr 1029, 1074). Exceptional powers are given by statute authorising the arrest of an indefinite number of persons found in gaming houses (see Unlawful Games Act, 1542 (33 Hen. 8, c 9), s 9, Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict c 47), s 48, Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict c 109), s 6, Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), s 11 see Murphy v Arrow, [1897] 2 Q. B. 527), in unlicensed theatres and other places of public entertainment (Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo 2, c 36), s 2, Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c 47), s 48), in places used for cockfighting etc. (Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict c 47), s. 47). Justices are also authorised by a number of statutes to issue search warrants in addition to those which they may issue at common law (see p 310, post). A warrant of commitment (i.e., a justices' order committing an accused person to prison to take his trial for an indictable offence) is made out, when the preliminary examination is concluded and the justices consider that a prima facie case has been established, see p. 322, post. As to bench warrants see p. 351, post.

- Sec. 1
Securing
Attendance
of Accused
Person. person has committed, or is suspected to have committed, any indictable offence within the limits of the jurisdiction of such justice, or that any person guilty or suspected of having committed any such crime outside such jurisdiction is residing or being, or suspected to reside or be, within such jurisdiction (l).
- Information 601 A warrant cannot issue unless there is an information in writing and on oath. A summons may be issued on an oral and unsworn information (m).
- Informer. Generally speaking, any person may be the informer and may make the charge before the justice, except where there is statutory provision limiting the power of making the charge to certain persons, or making the consent or order of some person a condition precedent to the institution of the proceedings (n).
- Attorney-General 602 It is the duty of the Attorney-General to institute prosecutions for crimes which have a tendency to disturb the peace of the State or to endanger the Government, and no information at the suit of anyone but the Attorney-General will be granted by the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice for such an offence (o).
- Director of Public Prosecutions 603 It is the duty of the Director of Public Prosecutions, under the superintendence of the Attorney-General, to institute, undertake or carry on such criminal proceedings, and to give such advice and assistance to chief officers of police, clerks to justices and other persons, whether officers or not, concerned in any criminal proceeding, respecting the conduct of that proceeding, as may be for the time being prescribed by regulations under the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1879 (p), or may be directed in a special case by the Attorney-General. The regulations under that Act provide for the Director of Public Prosecutions taking action in cases of importance or difficulty, or in which special circumstances or the refusal or failure of a person to proceed with a prosecution appear to render the action of such Director necessary to secure the due prosecution of an offender (q).
- (l) Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42) s 1. As to a warrant to apprehend a person for offences committed on the high seas or abroad, see ibid, s 2, and Schedule, Form E, and R v Eyre (1868), L R 3 Q B 487. 604. There are some statutes which require that certain criminal proceedings should be undertaken by particular persons, or only with the consent of particular persons, but in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary any person may of his own initiative, and without any preliminary consent, institute criminal proceedings with a view to an indictment (r)

605. If application is made to a justice to issue a summons or a warrant of arrest, he must exercise a judicial discretion in deciding to grant or refuse it. If he declines jurisdiction, or refuses to grant a summons for a reason which is bad in law, a rule may be granted by the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice

SECT. 1.
Securing Attendance of Accused Person.

Right of any person to initiate criminal proceedings
Discretion of justices as to summonses etc.

(r) In many statutes relating to proceedings before a court of summary jurisdiction there are provisions defining what person should be the informant (see, e.g., Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 42, and Nicholson v. Booth (1888), 57 L J (M C) 43, Pickering v. Willoughby, [1907] 2 K B 296, Tarry v. Neuman (1846), 15 M & W 645, Smith v. Dear (1903), 20 Cox, C C 458). In a few cases of indictable offences the power of instituting proceedings is limited to certain persons or made subject to the consent of certain persons. For instance, all indictments for any offences under the Customs Acts must be preferred in the name of the Attorney General or of some officer of Customs or Inland Revenue (Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 255. The consent of the Attorney General is required for a prosecution under the Official Secrets Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 52) (see ibid, s. 7 (1)), the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 69) (see ibid, s. 4), the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c 34) (see ibid, s. 2 (1)), the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 35) (see ibid, s. 24), the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 80, the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 55), s 69, the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (6 Edw 7, c 45), unless it is commenced by or on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions (see ibid, s. 6). Where an election court or election commissioners have reported that persons have been guilty of any corrupt practice, it rests with the Attorney-General to decide whether he should or should not institute or direct a prosecution, but it seems that there is nothing to prevent a private person from instituting a prosecution if he wishes (Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict c. 51), s 60), as to prosecutions by the Director of Public Prosecutions for corrupt or illegal practices, see ibid, ss 45, 57, and as to prosecutions by the returning officer at an election for personation, see Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 33), s. 24, and Parliamentary Voters Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict c 18), ss. 86, 87. See title ELECTIONS. If any person is charged before a justice with any crime under the Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), no further proceeding is to be taken against such person without the consent of the Attorney-General, except for the purpose of securing the safe custody of such person by remand or otherwise (ibid, s. 7). See title EXPLOSIVES. A prosecution under the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict c 73), s. 2, of a person who is not a subject of the King cannot be instituted in England except with the consent of a Secretary of State (ibid, s. 3). No criminal prosecution for libel can be commenced against any proprietor, publisher, editor, or any person responsible for the publication of a newspaper for any libel published in such newspaper without the order of a judge in chambers being first obtained (Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 64), s. 8, and see title LIBEL AND SLANDER). A prosecution of a bankrupt for an offence under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), or under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), may be ordered by a court exercising bankruptcy jurisdiction, and in such a case the Director of Public Prosecutions is to institute and carry on the prosecution (Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 62), s. 16; Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 168), but there is nothing which makes the order of such a court a condition precedent to the institution of proceedings or to prevent anyone from instituting them (R v Thomas (1869),

If he refuses to grant a summons or warrant and assigns several reasons for doing so, and some of these reasons are bad in law, but others are good, the court will not grant a mandamus (b)

If the office of Attorney-General is vacant, the Solicitor-General has, it seems, the powers of the Attorney-General (R v Wilkes (1770), 4 Burr 2527, at p 2534). In cases of offences under s 26 of the (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, and of inflicting bodily injury on a person under sixteen, if the justices before whom a complaint of the offences is heard certify that it is necessary for the purposes of public justice that the prosecution should be conducted by the guardians of the poor or overseers of the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed, the guardians, or, if there are no guardians, the overseers, must conduct the prosecution (ibid, s 73).

(c) Various periods of limitation after the offence is committed are provided by different statutes for the commencement of proceedings, e.g. (1) Three years in the case of treason (except the treason of designing, endeavouring or attempting any assassination on the body of the King by poison or otherwise), if it is committed in any part of the United Kingdom (Treason Act, 1695 (7 & 8 Will 3, c 3), s 5, 'Treason Act, 1708 (7 Ann c 21), 'Treason (Ireland) Act, 1821 (1 & 2 Geo 4, c 24), Fost 249, falsely pretending to be in holy orders and solemnising matrimony according to the rites of the Church of England (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo 4, c 76), s 21), offences against the Customs Acts (Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 257, see R v Thompson (1851) 16 Q. B 832), offences against the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict c 88), s. 46, or against the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 15 (there is an alternative period of limitation of one year after the discovery of the offence by the prosecution, if that period expires before the expiration of three years from the commission of the offence (ibid)). (2) Two years in the case of all indictments under any penal statute whereby the forfeiture is limited to the King (stat 31 Eliz c 5, s 5), unless the statute prescribes a different period. (3) Eighteen months in the case of a prosecution for perjury under the Marriage Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 72), from the solemnisation of the marriage for the procuring of which the false declaration punishable under that Act as perjury was made (ibid, s 4). (4) One year in the case of offences against the Riot Act, 1714 (1 Geo 1, stat. 2, c. 5) (ibid, s 8), or the Shipping Offences Act, 1793 (33 Geo 3, c. 67), s. 8, offences punishable upon indictment or otherwise than upon summary conviction under the Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 Geo 4, c 69) (ibid, s 4), offences under the Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts, i.e., the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict c. 102), the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 29), the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 125), the Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c 33), Part III., the Parliamentary Elections and Corrupt Practices Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c 75), the Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c 102), ss. 11, 49, 50, or the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c 51), if such an offence was committed in reference to an election with respect to which an inquiry is held by election commissioners, the period of limitation is one year after the offence was committed or three months after the report of such commissioners, whichever period last expires, but must in any case not exceed two years after the offence was committed (Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c 51), s 51) (g) Six months in the case of offences against the Unlawful Drilling Act, 1819 (60 Geo 3 & 1 Geo 4, c 1) (ibid, s 7), the offence of unlawfully and carnally knowing or attempting to have unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl of or above the age of thirteen years and under the age of sixteen (Criminal Law Amendment Act 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c 69), s. 5, Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), s 27, and see R v West, [1898] 1 Q B 174, O C R.) For any act done in pursuance or execution, or intended execution, of any Act of Parliament or of any public duty or authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such act, duty or authority, the prosecution must be commenced within six months next after the act, neglect or default complained of, or in case of continuance of injury within six months after the ceasing of such injury (Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c 61), s 1, see title PUBLIC AUTHORITIES AND PUBLIC OFFICERS) (h) Three months in the case of blasphemy under 9 Will 3, c. 35 (information of the blasphemous words must be given within four days after the words spoken (ibid, s 2))

Proof of the issue of a warrant which is not executed within the time limited for commencing the prosecution is not proof that the prosecution is commenced in time, unless proof is also given of the information (R v Phillips (1818), Russ & Ry 369, R v Parker (1864), L & Ca 459, R v Hull (1860), 2 F & F 16) If an indictment is presented within the time limited and is ignored, semble the prosecution has been commenced in time, and another indictment found after the expiration of the limited time would be valid (R v Kilmunster (1835), 7 O & P 228). If a prosecution is commenced for one offence (e g, feloniously shooting) within the limited time, and after the expiration of the limited time an indictment is found for a different offence arising out of the same facts (e g, an offence under the Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 Geo 4, c 69)), the prosecution is not commenced in time as regards the offence for which the indictment is found, unless the offence for which the indictment is found is one of which the accused person could have been found guilty, if he had been indicted for the other offence (R v Carbutt (1869), 11 Cox, O O 385), so, if a prosecution is commenced within the limited time for rape, and the indictment is found after the expiration of such time for an offence specified in s 9 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), the indictment is in time, because on an indictment for rape a person can be found guilty of any such offence (see Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s. 9) Where there is a time limited for the commencement of a prosecution, the day on which the offence was committed is to be excluded in the computation of the prescribed time (Radcliffe v. Bartholomew, [1892] 1 Q B 161, see Pellew v. Wonford (Inhabitants) (1829), 9 B & O 134, Williams v Burgess (1840), 12 Ad. & El 635) Sundays are to be included in the computation of time, unless the statute prescribing the time expressly excludes them (R v. Middlesex Justices (1843), 2 Dowd (N s) 719) In every Act passed after 1850 "month" means calendar month, unless the Act expressly or by implication makes provision to the contrary (Interpretation Act, 1859 (52 & 53 Vict c 63), s. 3)

(d) As regards offences punishable under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, except where some other limitation of time is prescribed by statutes, the information must be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of the information arose (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11, see title MAGISTRATES).

Arrest.

SUB-SECT 2—Arrest.

(1) In General

607. Arrest consists of the actual seizure or touching of a person's body with a view to his detention (h). It may be made either with or without a warrant. An arrest without a warrant may be under a power conferred by common law or by statute, and may be by a private person, or by a peace officer on the direction of a private person, or by a peace officer on his own initiative.

Anyone who assaults any person with intent to resist or prevent lawful apprehension is guilty of a misdemeanour (i).

An infant under seven cannot, it seems, be arrested (k).

(2) *Arrest without Warrant*By a private person

608. At common law the power of a private person to arrest is limited to cases where treason or felony has been actually committed or attempted, or where there is immediate danger of treason or felony being committed, or where a breach of the peace has been actually committed or is apprehended (l).

Treason or felony

609. If treason or felony has been actually committed, anyone except the King (m) may without a warrant arrest a person whom there is reasonable cause for suspecting of having committed the crime (n).

Anyone may without a warrant arrest a person whom he sees on the point of committing or attempting to commit treason or felony (o), but there is no power of arrest if the attempt has ceased (p).

(h) See Genner v Sparks (1704), 6 Mod Rep 173; Sandon v Jervis (1858), E B & E 935, Ex Oh, Russen v Lucas (1824), 1 C & P 153. The mere pronouncing of words of arrest without touching the body of the person it is sought to arrest is not an arrest, unless the person submits to the process and goes with the arresting officer. If he does not submit, there can be no arrest, unless the officer lays hold of him (Horner v. Battyn (1739), Buller's Nisi Prius, 61).

612. In cases of misdemeanour a peace officer, like a private person, has at common law no power of arresting without a warrant, except when a breach of the peace has been committed in his presence or when there is reasonable ground for supposing that a breach of the peace is about to be committed or renewed in his presence (a)

A peace officer is justified in receiving into custody from a private person a supposed offender whom the private person has lawfully arrested without a warrant (b)

If a peace officer sees a breach of the peace committed, or is assaulted or obstructed in the arrest of a felon, he can, if there is a reasonable necessity, call upon a private person for his assistance or that an indictment has been found against such a person, is sufficient ground of reasonable suspicion to justify an arrest by the constable, although no warrant has been handed to him (Creagh v Gamble (1888), 24 L. R. Ir. 468, Dalton, Country Justice, 447, 1 East, P. C. 300)

(y) Hedges v Chapman (1826), 2 Bing 523, Cowles v Dunbar (1827), 2 C. & P. 565, Hogg v Ward (1808), 3 H. & N. 417. "Whether a felony has been committed or not, if an individual charges a constable to take a party into custody, no action will lie against the constable, because in such a case it is his duty to act and not to deliberate" (Hedges v Chapman, supra, per Best, J., at p. 526). "If a person comes to a constable and says of another simpliciter, 'I charge this man with felony,' that is a reasonable ground, and the constable ought to take the person charged into custody. But if from the circumstances it appears to be an unfounded charge, the constable is not only not bound to act on it, but he is responsible for so doing" (Hogg v Ward, supra, per Bramwell, B., at p. 422, see M'Cloughan v Clayton (1816), Holt (N. R.), 478)

(a) See p. 297, ante, Griffin v Coleman (1859), 4 H. & N. 265, Hardy v Murphy (1795), 1 Esp. 294, Routh v Hanley (1826), 2 C. & P. 288, Lenny v Edwards (1823), 1 C. & P. 40, R v. Bright (1830), 4 C. & P. 367. A magistrate has no power to arrest for a misdemeanour committed in his presence, where there is no breach of the peace and where it is not necessary to arrest the offender to prevent the renewal of the act (R v. Poe (1866), 15 L. T. (N. S.) 37, per Pigot, C. B., at p. 40). A constable may apprehend anyone who aids or abets those who commit a breach of the peace in his presence (Lenny v Edwards, supra, at p. 43). If an offender is apprehended and is in the custody of a peace officer, and a person espouses his cause and encourages him to resist the officer, he may arrest such person (White v Edmunds (1792), Peake, 123). If an affray has happened and a blow or wound has been given, and it seems likely that a felony will be committed, a constable may take the offender into custody without a warrant, although he was not present, when the affray took place. But unless there is reasonable ground for believing that a felony will probably be committed, there is no power of arrest (Onupen v Henley (1797), 2 Esp. 540).

(b) See Timothy v Simpson (1835), 1 Cr. M. & R. 757, R v. Walker (1855), Dears. C. C. 368; R v. Light (1857), 27 L. J. (M. C.) 1, C. C. R.; Derricourt v Warburton (1855), 5 E. & B. 188, R v. Marsden (1868), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 131, Baynes v Brewster (1841), 2 Q. B. 376, and p. 296, ante. If a breach of the peace has been committed but is over, and the offender has quitted the spot where the breach was committed and there is nothing to show that he intends to renew the offence (e.g., when he runs away on the constable being sent for), there is nothing to justify arrest by the constable on the information of the person complaining (Baynes v Brewster, supra, see R v. Light, supra, Cook v. Nethercote (1834), 6 C. & P. 741).

in arresting an offender, and such person commits an indictable offence if he refuses to aid the constable (c).

613 There are a large number of statutes which expressly authorise arrest without a warrant. Such power is in some cases given generally to any person (d), in some cases to certain specified

(c) See R v Brown (1841), Car & M 314, and p 506, post. So it is the duty of magistrates at the time of a riot to keep the peace and restrain rioters and pursue and take them, and to enable the magistrates to do this they may call on all the King's subjects to assist them, and all the King's subjects are bound to do so upon reasonable warning (R v Pinney (1832), 5 C & P 254, and see the Riot Act, 1714 (1 Geo 1, stat 2, c 5), s 3). Persons who aid the magistrates or constables in a case of necessity are protected from the consequences of their acts (Redford v Burley (1822), 3 Stark 76, Staught v Gee (1818), 2 Stark 445).

There was an old common law process of pursuing felons and those who had dangerously wounded another called "hue and cry," which could be raised by precept of a justice of the peace or by a peace officer or by any private man that knew of a felony, the party raising it had to acquaint the constable of the vill with all the circumstances which he knew of the felony and the person of the felon, and thereupon it was the duty of the constable to search his own town and raise all the neighbouring vills and make pursuit with horse and foot. In the prosecution of such hue and cry the constable and his attendants had the same powers, protection, and indemnification as if acting under a warrant of a justice of the peace (4 Bl Com 290, 2 Hawk 1<sup>o</sup> C, c 12, s 6, p 115). A person who joined in following a suspected felon upon a hue and cry was justified in arresting the party pursued, even though no felony had been committed, for the person who so joined was under the same protection as the constable (1 Hale, P C 464). The statutes relating to hue and cry (13 Edw 1, stat 2, co 1 and 4, 28 Edw 3, c 11, 27 Eliz c 13, and 8 Geo 2, c 16) made the duty of raising and following the hue and cry imperative by imposing on the hundred a liability to make compensation for robberies, if the robber was not taken, and other statutes (e.g., 9 Geo 1, c 22) made the hundred responsible for damages done by persons riotously and tumultuously assembled, if the offenders were not convicted. The statutes as to hue and cry were repealed by 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 27, and the other statutes by 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 31, and the only relic of the former proceeding against the hundred is the remedy which a person who sustains a loss through the destruction of a house, building or any property thereon, or the plundering of a stranded ship or boat, or the destruction of machinery by persons riotously assembled together has against the police authority of the district (Riot (Damages) Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict c 38), s 2). But the liability of every person in the county to be ready and appalled at the command of the sheriff and at the cry of the county to arrest a felon still remains (Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 55), s 8 (1)) and a person who followed at the cry of the county and arrested a supposed felon would, it seems, be still entitled to the same protection, as if he were a peace officer.

(d) E.g., any person may apprehend without warrant anyone found committing an indictable offence in the night, i.e., between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. (Prevention of Offences Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 19), ss 11, 13), or anyone found committing any offence punishable by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) (see ibid, s 103) (except the offence of unlawful angling in the daytime, ibid, s 24), or anyone committing an offence punishable by virtue of the Public Stores Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 25) (ibid, s 12, see also Downing v Capel (1867), L R 2 C P 461, Field v Musgrove (1867), 16 L R 536; Leds v Hart (1868), L R 3 C P 322, and compare Morris v Wise (1860), 2 F & F 51), or anyone found committing an indictable offence against the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 99) (see ibid, s 31), or anyone found offending against the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 83) (see ibid, s 8; and Horley v Rogers (1880), 2 E & E 674), or anyone found committing an offence against s. 146 of the Spirits Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 24), or anyone who is guilty of riotous or disorderly behaviour in any persons or under certain conditions, as well as to constables or other peace officers (e), and in some cases to constables or other peace officers alone (f)

A person committing an offence under the Revenue Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict c 22), s 31 (selling cards without a licence), may be apprehended by any constable or officer of Inland Revenue Under the Pedlars Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict c 96), s 18, if a person acting as a pedlar refuses to show his certificate or has no certificate, or refuses to allow the opening or inspection of his pack etc. by a constable or officer of the police, such person may be apprehended by any of the persons authorised to demand the production of the pedlar's certificate, or any other person acting by the order or at the request or in aid of such person. Under the Hawkers Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 33), s 6, any officer of Inland Revenue or officer of the peace may arrest a person found committing an offence against that section (hawking without licence etc.) Under the Explosives Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 17), s 78, any person who is found committing an offence for which he is liable to a penalty under the Act, and which tends to cause an explosion etc in or about any factory etc., may be apprehended by a constable or an officer of the local authority, or by the occupier or servant etc. of the occupier of the factory etc Under the Metropolitan Board of Works Act, 1877 (40 Vict c viii), s 9, any constable or any officer of the London County Council (see Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c 41), s 119, may seize and detain any person committing or having committed any offence against the Metropolitan Board of Works Act, 1877 (40 Vict. c. viii), or any bye-law thereunder, if the name or residence of such person is unknown to such officer. Under the Naval Deserters Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 62), s. 9, any person reasonably suspected of being a deserter from the King's navy may be apprehended by the constable of any place where such person is found and, if no such constable can be immediately met with, by any person in the King's service. Under the Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), s. 154, any person reasonably suspected of being a deserter from the army may be apprehended by a constable or if no constable can be immediately met with, by any other officer or soldier or "other person." As to "military custody," see ibid., s. 54.

(f) Thus, any constable or peace officer may apprehend without warrant any person whom he shall find lying or loitering in any highway, yard, or other place, and whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony mentioned in the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100) (see ibid., s. 66), or any felony against the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96) (see ibid., s. 104), or against the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97) (see ibid., s. 57). If a sheriff encounters any resistance in the execution of a writ, he is to take with him "the power of the county" and to go in proper person "to do execution," and may arrest the resisters and commit them to prison, and every such resister is guilty of a mis demeanour (Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55), s. 8 (2)). Under the Profane Oaths Act, 1743 (19 Geo. 2, c. 21), s. 3, any constable or other peace officer may seize, secure and detain any person "who shall profanely swear or curse in the presence and hearing" of such constable and who shall be unknown to him. Under the Unlawful Drilling Act, 1819 (60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, c. 1), s. 2, any justice of the peace or peace officer, or any other person acting in their aid or assistance, may disperse an unlawful meeting or assembly prohibited by the Act (i.e., for the purpose of training or drilling persons to the use of arms without lawful authority), and may arrest and detain any person present at, or aiding, assisting or abetting, any such assembly or meeting. Under the Hosier v. Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 40), s. 9, every peace officer and constable, and every watchman duly appointed by law, during such time as he shall be on duty, may apprehend, or cause to be apprehended, any person whom he may reasonably suspect of having or carrying or in any way conveying at any time after sun setting and before sun rising any woollen etc. materials intrusted to any person for the purpose of being manufactured etc., or any tools or apparatus intrusted to any person for manufacturing such materials, if it is suspected that such materials etc. have been or are being purloined, embezzled or otherwise fraudulently disposed of, see also the Frauds by Workmen Act, 1777 (17 Geo. 3, c. 56) s. 11. Under the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 92), s. 13, any constable, upon his own view, or upon the complaint and information of any other person who shall declare his name and place of abode to the constable, may seize and secure any offender against the Act. Under the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), s. 3, any constable in any police district, if authorised in writing by the chief officer of police in that district, may take into custody any convict who is the holder of a licence granted under the Penal Servitude Acts, if it appears to such constable that such convict is getting his livelihood by dishonest means (see also ibid., s. 7). Under the Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 2, any constable may take into custody any holder of a licence under the Penal Servitude Acts (see ibid., s. 11) or any person under the supervision of the police in pursuance of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112) whom he reasonably suspects of having committed "any offence." Under the Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 25, any constable may demand the name and address of any person found on any licensed premises at a time when they should be closed, and if such person fails to give his name or address, or if the constable has reasonable ground to suppose that the name or address given is false, and requires evidence of the correctness of the name or address given, and such person fails to give such evidence, the constable may apprehend such person. Similar provisions are contained in the Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 17, in the case of persons found on premises where intoxicating liquor is unlawfully sold or kept. Under the Indecent Advertisements Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 18), s. 6, any constable or other peace officer may arrest any person

(h) But, if a considerable time has elapsed after the facts have taken place

Where power is conferred by statute to arrest a person found or seen committing an offence or doing some specified act(i), the arrest must in most cases be made while the offence is actually being committed or the act is being done, or on fresh pursuit(s). Except on fresh pursuit the arrest cannot be made without a warrant, after the offence has been completed or the act done(j). Certain statutes, however, which give a power of arrest without warrant expressly authorise the making of the arrest after the offence has been committed(k).

SECT. I.
Securing

of Accused

615 A person who arrests another without a warrant, purporting to act under the powers of a statute, must satisfy all the conditions that the statute imposes, otherwise he incurs liability to an action for false imprisonment, or is deprived of the protection which he would otherwise have (l).

which give rise to the suspicion, a constable could hardly be justified in arresting without warrant on suspicion, unless the supposed felon has absconded, or unless the constable knows that the supposed felon has been indicted for felony or that a warrant has been issued for his arrest on a charge of felony by a duly authorised magistrate (see Dalton, Country Justice, p 447, 1 East, P O, 300, Oreagh v Gamble (1888), 24 L. R. Ir 458)

(i) See p 300, ante

(j) See Downing v Capel (1867), L. R. 2 O. P. 161, Griffith v Taylor (1876), 2 O. P. D. 194, O. A., R v Curran (1828), 3 O. & P. 397, Simmons v Millingen (1846), 2 O. B. 524, Morris v Wise (1860), 2 F. & F. 51, Mathews v Biddulph (1841), 3 Man. & G. 390. As to what is fresh pursuit, see R v Howarth (1828), 1 Mood. O. C. 207. There are some offences which a person cannot be "found committing," because they depend upon circumstances which are not all apparent at any particular time. Thus, generally speaking, a person cannot be "found committing" the offence of embezzlement, except in such a case as where a servant who ought to put money received on behalf of the master into the master's till is seen putting it into his own pocket. Where the charge against a servant was that he had embezzled various sums "within the last fortnight," it was held that s. 103 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 86) did not apply, and that the servant could not be arrested without a warrant as being found committing the offence (Feld v Musgrove (1867), 16 L. T. 536). So a person cannot be "found committing" the offence, under s. 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), of wilfully refusing or neglecting to maintain his family whom he is legally bound to maintain, and whom he has means to maintain, so that they become chargeable to the parish (Horley v. Rogers (1860), 2 E. & B. 674).

(k) See Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), as 104, 154, Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 52, Metropolitan Board of Works Act, 1877 (40 Vict. c. viii), s. 9, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 2, and pp 302, 303, ante.

(l) See Simmons v Millingen (1846), 2 O. B. 524, Bowditch v Bulchin (1850), 5 Exch. 378, R v Curran, supra, Poulton v London and South Western Rail Co (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 534. A private person who lawfully arrests another without a warrant has all the protection of a constable, and if the person arrested kills the arrester, the act may amount to murder (R v Curran, supra, and see p 573, post). If a person arrests another in pursuance of a power given by any Act of Parliament, an action against him in respect of any such act must be commenced within six months after the act complained of (Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1, supra title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS). A person is entitled to the benefit of this Act if he honestly and bona fide believes that he is acting in pursuance of an Act of Parliament, whether there be reasonable ground for such belief or not (Hermann v. Senechal (1862), 13 O. B. (N. S.) 392, Roberts v. Orchard (1863), 2 H. & C. 769, Ex. Ch., Chamberlain v. King (1871), L. R. 6 O. P. 474 (explaining Loeb v. Hart (1868), L. R. 3 O. P. 322); and see Nathan v. Oohn (1812), 3 Camp. 257).

Arrest under Summary
Jurisdiction
Act, 1879

616 A private person who arrests another under a common law power can only detain him for a reasonable time, and must then either set him free or hand him over to a constable or take him before a justice of the peace (m)

If the suspected offender is not liberated and is not taken before a justice with reasonable expedition and by a direct road, the person who arrests is liable to an action of trespass (n).

Statutes which authorise a private person to arrest without warrant commonly contain a direction that the person arrested shall be taken before a justice of the peace (o), or a direction that he shall be conveyed or delivered to a peace officer or constable in order to his being conveyed as soon as reasonably or conveniently may be before a justice of the peace (p)

If a constable or other peace officer arrests a person without warrant, such person must be taken as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace (q).

A person arrested without warrant for an offence punishable on summary conviction must be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction as soon as practicable after he is taken into custody (a)

If it is not practicable to bring him before a court of summary jurisdiction within twenty-four hours after he is taken into custody,

(m) Wright v Court (1825), 4 B & C 596. In some cases there may be a power to detain a person for a reasonable time for the sake of preserving peace, but no power to take him before a justice, such a person should be liberated when the reasonable time has elapsed (see Williams v Glenister (1824), 2 B & C 699, 2 Hawk P O, c 12, s 19)

(n) Wright v Court, supra, Morris v Wise (1860), 2 F & F 51. A private person cannot apprehend another upon suspicion of felony for the purpose of taking him to the place where the felony was committed in order to ascertain whether he was the offender (Hall v Booth (1834), 3 Nev & M (κ β) 316). If a private person arrests another without warrant and hands him over to a constable, and the offender is not brought before a justice within a reasonable time, the private person is liable for the delay, except, it seems where the statute under which he is acting authorises him to deliver the offender to a constable (see Wright v Court, supra)

(o) See Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 103, under which the person found committing must be "immediately apprehended" and "forthwith taken" before some neighbouring justice of the peace (see R v Curran (1828), 3 O & P 397), Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 61, Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 179, Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 72 (2)).

(q) See Wright v Court, supra, Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 66, Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 104, Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), ss 57, 61, Riot Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat 2, c. 5), s 3. Where two constables were taking a man before a magistrate on the charge of disorderly conduct, and the magistrate met them in the street and sent the prisoner back to the lock-up and told the constables to bring him up for examination the next day, it was held that the magistrate was liable to an action for trespass for sending the plaintiff back to the lock-up, as he ought to have either inquired into the case on the first day, or to have told the constables to take the prisoner before another magistrate (Edwards v Ferris (1836), 7 C & P 542)

a superintendent or inspector of police, or other officer of police of equal or superior rank or in charge of any police station, must inquire into the case, and, except where the offence appears to such officer to be of a serious nature, the prisoner must be discharged on his entering into a recognisance, with or without sureties, to appear before some such court (b).

SECT. 1.
Securing
Attendance

Person.

617. A private person or a constable may break open the outer door of the house of another in order to prevent a murder being committed in such house and to arrest the offender (c)

Breaking open doors
to arrest

If a felony has been committed and the felon is followed to a house, and there is no other means of entering, a private person or constable may, it seems, break open the door of the house to arrest the offender (d). This may also be done if a felony will probably be committed unless a private person or constable interferes to prevent it (e).

If an affray occurs in the presence of a constable, and the offenders run away and are immediately pursued by the constable and they enter a house, then the doors may be broken open by the constable to apprehend them in the course of such immediate pursuit (f).

Before doors are broken open to effect an arrest due notice must be given and admission be demanded and refused (g).

(iii) Arrest under Warrant

618 A justice's warrant for arrest can only be executed by a constable or peace officer (h) Execution of warrants

It may be directed to any constable by name, or generally to the constable of the parish or other district within which it is to be executed, or to such constable and all other constables or peace officers in the county or other district within which the justice issuing the warrant has jurisdiction, or generally to all the constables or peace officers within such county or district.

The warrant states shortly the offence on which it is founded and that an information has been sworn, or facts on which it is based

A person arrested without a warrant under the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32), cannot be detained for a longer period than twelve hours from the time of his apprehension, but must be brought before some justice of the peace within that time, and if he cannot, he must be discharged (ibid., s. 31).

Apart from these statutes a constable had no power to execute a warrant outside the limits of his own constablewick, unless he was specified by name, in which case his authority was co-extensive with that of the person issuing the warrant (1 Hale, P O 459, R. v Weir (1823), 1 B & C 288; *Gladwell v. The warrant remains in force in spite of the death of the justice who issued it (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 37). Under most of these Acts the search warrant must be executed by a constable or other police officer, but under some of them a search by other persons is authorised (e.g. Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo 2, c 36), s 2, Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict c 22), s 11, Petroleum Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict c 105), s 13, Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 55), s 119, Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 76), s 97, Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 203; Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 10). Some of the statutes under which search warrants may be issued authorise a search in the day time only (Frauds by Workmen Act, 1748 (22 Geo 2, c 27), s 4, Frauds by Workmen Act, 1777 (17 Geo 3, c 56), s 10, Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict c 22), s 11, Obscene Publications Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 83), s 1, Malicious Damages Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 29), s 55, Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 65, Old Metal Dealers Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 110), s 4, Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 204, Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 12). One statute (Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 93), s 36), authorises a search "in the hours of business" only. Two statutes authorise a search at any time by day or night (Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict c 71), s 25, Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict c 109), s 3, Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), s 11, Obscene Publications Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 83), s 1, Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 93), s 36, Explosives Act, 1875 (38 Vict c 17), s 73, Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 203, Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 76), s 97, Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Edw 7, c 28), s 29, Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 21 (3). Quære, whether there is not in all cases of search warrants, as in warrants of arrest, a power to use force and break open doors, if admittance is demanded and refused (Launrok v Brown (1819), 2 B & Ald 592, Burdett v Abbot (1811), 14 East, 1, at pp 168, 162). Some of the statutes (Frauds by Workmen Act, 1777 (17 Geo 3, c 56), s 10, Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict c 71), s 25, Hosiery Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict c 40), s 8, Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 58), s 156, Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo 2, c 36), s 2, Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 83), s 13, Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict c 109), s 3, Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), s 11, Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 10, Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 24, Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict c 49), s 17) authorise arrest in certain cases of persons found on the premises searched.

(f) The procedure relating to the preliminary examination before justices is chiefly governed by the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42). The accused person may appear before justices in obedience to a summons, or may be brought up before them in custody either with or without a warrant, or, if he is already in prison, may be brought before them under an order of the Secretary of State under the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 41), s 11. Mansion House or Guildhall justice rooms in the City, may act alone in doing anything authorised by the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), ss 29, 30. It seems that any justice of the peace acting within his jurisdiction may hold the preliminary examination of a person accused of an indictable offence (ibid, s 17, where the expression used is "any justice or justices", but see the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 64), s 1, which provides that, if the charge is one of felony or suspicion of felony, one justice may take the examination and commit the accused to trial or discharge him, but if the whole evidence given before such justice neither raises a strong presumption of guilt nor warrants the dismissal of the charge, such justice must order the accused to be detained in custody until he be taken before two justices at the least). The room or building in which the examination is taken is not to be deemed an open court (see s 19 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848), but according to some authorities s 19 has been altered by s 13 (11) of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 63), and the law officers of the Crown on 1st December, 1884, advised that justices, even when taking an examination, must sit in open court as prescribed by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 43), s 12, and the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 20 (see Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure, 9th ed, p 350). It is submitted, however, that s 19 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), shows sufficient indication of a "contrary intention" to exclude this interpretation. Moreover, a justice may take at a hospital the depositions of a witness who is dangerously ill, and such depositions, if taken in compliance with the requirements of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 17, are admissible in evidence subsequently apart from the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 35), s 6 (R v Katz (1900), 64 J P 807, and p 327, post). This appears to show that a justice may act under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), in a place which is not an open court. A justice or justices duly authorised to act in the place where they sit have jurisdiction to inquire into charges in respect of—(1) Offences committed within the county etc for which the justice or justices act (R v Deckley (1857), 16 Cox, O O 331, C O R., see p 280, ante). (2) Offences committed outside the county etc for which the justices act, if the accused is residing or being or suspected to reside or be within the limits of the jurisdiction of the justices, and appears or is brought before them by a summons or warrant issued by them (see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 1), or by a warrant issued outside their jurisdiction and backed by a justice within their jurisdiction, if such justice has directed that the accused should be brought before some justice or justices within his jurisdiction, and the prosecutor or some of the witnesses for the prosecution are then present in the county or place where the accused was apprehended (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 11). In such a case the justices must, it seems, give the accused an opportunity of calling witnesses for the defence (see p 317, post). If such justices are of opinion that the evidence is sufficient proof of the charge, they may commit the accused for trial or admit him to bail to appear at his trial in the county etc where the offence is alleged to have been committed. If the evidence is not sufficient, the justice or justices are to bind the witnesses over to give evidence and order the accused person to be taken before some justice or justices for the county etc where the offence is alleged to have been committed (ibid, s 22, and Schedule, Form R (1)). (3) Offences committed on the high seas, or within the Admiralty jurisdiction, or on land beyond the seas, if an indictment may legally be preferred in any place in England or Wales for such offence (see p 273, ante), and if a person charged with such an offence has been brought before the justice or justices under a warrant of a justice acting for the same county etc (ibid, s 2, see R v Byrs (1868), L R 3 Q B 487). A justice who acts for two districts adjoining each other may, while he is in one of these districts, act for the other district (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 5). All the acts of justices, and of any constable or officer in obedience thereto, are to be as good in relation to any detached part of any county which is surrounded in whole or in part by the county for which such justices act, as if the same were to all intents and purposes part of the county for which they act (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict, c 42), s 7). As to the qualification of justices, see title MAGISTRATES.

The accused person must be present during the whole of the examination (g)

The object of the examination is not to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, but to inquire whether the accused ought or ought not to be committed for trial (h)

The accused person has the right to be assisted by counsel or solicitor retained by him (i). The prosecutor (i.e., the person supporting the charge) must appear by himself or by counsel or solicitor (k).

The accused is not asked whether he is guilty or not guilty of the charge, but the case for the prosecution is commenced at once (l)

(g) See Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), ss 17, 18. The procedure under this Act is only applicable to the case of a person in the ordinary sense of the word, that is, to someone whose physical appearance before justices is possible (ibid, ss 1, 17, 18). It seems, therefore, that there can be no proceeding under this Act for the examination of a charge against a body corporate, and that s 2 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c 63), as to "person" in a penal act including body corporate does not apply, as a "contrary intention" appears from the language of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), ss 1, 17, 18, if a corporation is charged with an indictable offence, the proper proceeding is by way of indictment in the first instance. See also title CORPORATIONS, Vol VIII, p 390.

(h) R v Carden (1879), 5 Q. B. D. 1, per COCKBURN, C.J., at p 6.

(i) R v Griffiths (1886), 54 L. T. 280. Before the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), it was held that justices had a discretion whether they would admit or exclude an advocate (Cox v Coleridge (1822), 1 B. & C. 37, R v Borron (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 432, R v Staffordshire Justices (1819), 1 Chit. 217, Collier v Hinks (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 663). S 17 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), contemplates the cross examination of the witnesses for the prosecution by counsel or solicitor for the accused. The accused has no right to have the case adjourned for the attendance of counsel or solicitor (R v Cambridgeshire Justices (1880), 44 J. P. 168, R v Higgins (1862), 5 L. T. 605), but an adjournment for such attendance may (see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 21), be granted, and should be granted, if the application for such an adjournment is made bond fide.

(k) If the prosecutor or someone on his behalf does not appear to support the charge, the charge will be dismissed, but if the non-attendance is caused by a mistake, a fresh summons should be issued (R v Bennett (1908), 72 J. P. 362). The proceedings do not abate by the death of the justice who issued the summons or warrant (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 37), or of the person who instituted criminal proceedings (R v Truclure (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 336). Any person may, it appears, take up the prosecution on the death of such person. Most prosecutions are now conducted at the instance of the police, but where there is a private prosecutor present and ready to proceed with the prosecution, he ought to have the conduct of the proceedings, except where the Director of Public Prosecutions takes up the prosecution (see R v Taylor, Times, 2nd November, 1896, p. 7).

(l) No objection can be taken to the information or complaint on which the summons or warrant in the case has been issued for any alleged defect in substance or in form, or for any variance between it and the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution, nor can any such objection be taken to any such summons or warrant, if there is any such variance between the summons or warrant and the evidence that the examining justices think that the party charged has been deceived or misled, the justices, at the request of the party charged, may adjourn the hearing to some future day, and in the meantime remand the party charged or admit him to bail (Indictable Offences Act, 1848

 CASE

Evidence.

If the prosecutor has counsel or solicitor to represent him, the counsel or solicitor may, if the examining justices think fit, make an opening speech giving the outlines of the case

After the close of the opening speech, or, if there is no counsel or solicitor present for the prosecution, immediately after the reading of the charge, the evidence is adduced (m).

(11 & 12 Vict c 42), ss 8, 9, 10, and see p 319, post) An objection by the defendant to the jurisdiction of the justices must, however, be taken before the hearing of the evidence begins, as otherwise the defendant may be considered to have waived the objection (R v Hughes (1879), 4 Q. B. 1 D 614, C C R)

(m) The attendance of witnesses who will not voluntarily appear is secured by a summons issued by a justice on it being proved on oath or affirmation that any person within the jurisdiction of such justice is likely to give material evidence for the prosecution and will not voluntarily appear. The summons is to be under the hand and seal of the justice, and requires the person whose attendance as a witness is desired to appear at a time and place mentioned in the summons before such justice or such other justice or justices for the same county, place etc., who shall be there, to testify what he knows concerning the charge. If the witness disobeys the summons and no just excuse is offered for the disobedience, then, on it being proved upon oath or affirmation that the summons was served on such person, either personally or by leaving it for him with some person at his last or usual place of abode, the justice or justices before whom the person summoned should have appeared may issue a warrant under his or their hands and seals to bring the person summoned at a time and place mentioned in the warrant before the justice or justices issuing the warrant, or such other justice or justices of the same county etc., as shall then be there to testify concerning the matter. Such a warrant may be issued in the first instance on proof that it is probable that the person will not attend without being compelled, and it may be backed in the same way as a warrant of arrest (see p 508, ante), so that it may be executed out of the jurisdiction of the justice who issued it, if on the appearance of the person who is summoned or brought up on a warrant he refuses to take or be examined on oath or affirmation, or to answer questions put to him without offering any just excuse for such refusal, any justice of the peace then present and having jurisdiction there may by warrant under his hand and seal commit such person to prison for a term not exceeding seven days, unless he in the meantime consents to be examined and to answer (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 16). As to the form of summons in such a case, see schedule to the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), Form L (1), as to warrant to bring up the witness, see ibid, Form L (2), (3), as to warrant of commitment of a witness, see Form L (4). S 16 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), only authorises the issue of a summons to secure the attendance of a person as a witness, when such person is within the jurisdiction of the justice, a court of summary jurisdiction, however, may, by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 36, issue such a summons, when the person is outside the jurisdiction of the court, such a summons may be indorsed by a court of summary jurisdiction for the place where the person is or is believed to be, and if the person is served with a summons so indorsed and is paid or tendered a reasonable amount for his expenses, he must obey the summons, and on default is liable to be apprehended. It has been contended that by virtue of s 13 (11) of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 63), s 36 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), now applies to the examination of a person charged with an indictable offence (see Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure, 9th ed., p 192). S 16 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), makes no provision for the case of a witness who attends voluntarily refusing to give evidence, but semble the justice or justices present have power to commit in such a case (see Bennet v. Watson (1814), 3 M. & S. 1, and Evans v. Rees (1840), 12 Ad. & Ell 56). A justice has no power to order a witness to bring or produce documents, the only way of securing the production of documents by a witness is to serve him with a Crown Office subpoena duces tecum.

The statements of the witnesses must be made on oath or affirmation (n) in the presence of the examining justice or justices and of the accused person. The accused person, or his counsel or solicitor, has the right to cross-examine any witness (o), and the prosecutor, or his counsel or solicitor, can re-examine Depositions.

The statements of each witness must be put into writing in the presence of the examining justices and of the accused (p), the statements are then known as depositions. The deposition of each witness must be read over to him, and must be signed by him, and the whole of the depositions must be signed by the examining justices (q)

As to procuring the attendance of witnesses for the defence, see p 313, note (b), post. The attendance of a witness who is in custody may be secured by a warrant issued by a judge of the King's Bench Division under the Criminal Procedure Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 30), s 9, or by an order in writing under the hand of a Secretary of State under the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 41), s 11

(n) Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 17. See Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 46). As to statements by children, see p 328, post. In the case of a charge of an offence under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), ss 27, 55, or 56, or any offence against a child under the age of sixteen years under ibid, ss 5, 42, 43, 52, or 62, or of an offence under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), or an offence under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), or Part II of the Children Act, 1904 (8 Edw 7, c 67), or under the Dangerous Performances Acts, 1879 and 1897 (42 & 43 Vict c 34, 60 & 61 Vict c 52), or any other offence involving bodily injury to a child under the age of sixteen years, if a child of tender years who is tendered as a witness does not in the opinion of the justices understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such child may be received without oath, if such child has in the opinion of the justices sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence and understands the duty of speaking the truth, but such evidence requires corroboration. The evidence of such child is to be deemed to be a deposition within the meaning of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 17 (see Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), s 15, Children Act, 1908 (4 Edw 7, c 67), s 30)

S 17 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), provides that the statements are to be put in writing by the justice or justices who take the examination, but this duty is generally deputed to the clerk to the justices (see R v Watts, supra, per MARRIN, B., at p 64), see also Ex parte Bottomley, [1909] 2 K. Caution to accused.

Statement of accused.

628 After all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, the examining justices may, if they consider that the evidence for the prosecution is not sufficient to justify commitment, discharge the accused at once. If they think the evidence is sufficient, they must, without requiring the attendance of the witnesses, read or cause to be read to the accused the depositions taken against him and ask him if he wishes to say anything in answer to the charge. The accused must be cautioned, first, that he is not obliged to say anything, and, secondly, that he has nothing to hope from any promise of favour and nothing to fear from any threat which may have been held out to him to induce him to make any admission or confession of guilt, but that whatever he may then say will be taken down in writing and may be given in evidence against him on his trial (r).

The accused may then, if he wishes, make a statement not on oath. Such statement, if any, must be taken down in writing, signed by the examining justices, and kept with and transmitted in the same manner as the depositions of the witnesses (r).

If the accused is afterwards committed for trial, his statement may, if necessary, be given in evidence against him without further proof, unless it is proved that the justice or justices purporting to sign the statement did not in fact sign it (i).

caption is imperatively required, at any rate, it is sufficient if the caption contains the names of the witnesses and the charge (R v Langbridge (1849), 2 Car & Kir 975, 977, Ex Oh). In cases of depositions taken out of court under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 35), s 6, a particular form of caption is prescribed (see R v Prestridge (1881), 72 L T Jo 93). Everything that is material should be inserted in the depositions, e.g., if the accused during the examination of a witness makes any statement or observation which is material, such statement or observation should be taken down (R v Weller (1846), 2 Car & Kir 223, per PLATT, B, at p 224). It would seem that, if anything that was said is omitted from the depositions, and the depositions are regularly taken and it becomes material to inquire at the trial whether the thing in question was or was not said, evidence is not admissible to contradict the deposition (R v Weller, supra, R v Christopher (1850), 1 Den 336, but see R v Moore (1869), 20 L T 987, where LUSH, J, after consulting KEATING, J, admitted such evidence). If the depositions are irregularly taken, questions may be asked to contradict such depositions (R v Christopher, supra). If the depositions are regularly taken, there is a presumption of law that the accused had full opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses whose evidence is taken down, but where the issue was whether a person was sane enough to be tried, BRETT, J, allowed counsel for the prisoner to ask the witness who proved the deposition of a deceased person whether the accused was, when the evidence was taken, in such a state of mind as to be able to understand what was going on (R v Peacock (1870), 12 Cox, C O 21). As to depositions taken in a language which it is alleged the accused does not understand, see R v Jones (1855), 49 J P 728. It was said before the passing of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), that if a person of weak intellect is examined as a witness before a justice, and questions are put by a justice and answered by the person called as to his competency to take an oath, such questions and answers should be put down on the depositions (R v Painter (1846), 2 Car & Kir 319), but the dictum has no application, it seems, to the law as it is now (see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c 42), s. 17). On the death or illness of a witness, his deposition, if regularly taken, but not otherwise, may be used as evidence at the trial (see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c 42), s. 17).

629. After the accused person has been asked whether he has anything to say in answer to the charge, and, if he says anything, after what he says has been taken down in writing and signed by the examining justices, the justices must ask the accused if he desires to call any witnesses.

SMO. 2.
Preliminary Examination before Justices.

The accused person may now himself give evidence, if he wishes, or the wife or husband of the accused may give evidence for him or her on the application of the accused, and may be cross-examined and re-examined (s).

Evidence of accused.

If the accused person is the only witness as to the facts called for the defence, he must give evidence immediately after the close of the evidence for the prosecution (t).

If the accused intends to call witnesses besides himself, his counsel or solicitor, if he has one, may with the permission of the justices address them and open the defence, or may reserve his speech till after the close of the evidence for the defence (a).

The witnesses for the defence, where there are any besides the accused, are called after the opening speech, if any, of the counsel or solicitor for the defence, and may be cross examined and re-examined (b). Their statements are to be taken on oath or committed for trial, see p 321, post. The statement of the accused is admissible in evidence against him subsequently, if the first caution has been given ("You are not obliged to say anything" etc.), it is not necessary to prove that the second caution ("You have nothing to hope from any promise of favour" etc.) was given (R v Sansone (1850), 3 Car & Kir 352, C C R.) Where an accused is cautioned and makes a statement and a remand follows and after the remand his solicitor asks some questions of the witnesses and the accused is again cautioned and declines to make a statement, the first statement can be read in evidence at the trial (R v Bond (1850), 3 Car & Kir 337, n). The caution is only needed at the close of the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, a voluntary statement made by an accused person in the course of the examination and before all the witnesses have been examined is admissible in evidence against him at the trial, although no caution has been previously given (R v Stripp (1850), Dears C C 648). The caution is only applicable to accused persons, and has no application to witnesses (R v Gonte (1873), L R 4 P O 598). If a prisoner before the justices gives evidence on his own behalf under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), before the caution is given, the evidence which he gives is admissible against him on his trial (R v Bird (1896), 19 Cox, C C 180). As to admissions and confessions made out of court by a defendant, see p 394, post.

(s), Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), s 1. As to the limits of cross-examination in such a case, see ibid, and p 404, post.

(t) Ibid, s 2. Id, it seems after the accused has been asked if he has anything to say in answer to the charge (see Criminal Law Amendment Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 36), s 3). In R v Lord (1898), 19 Cox, C C 180, the caution was given after the accused had given evidence, quære whether the caution should not be given before the accused gives evidence. An accused person may now make a statement, not on oath, in answer to the caution, and he may also make a statement on oath either in addition to or instead of the statement not on oath, or he may decline either to make a statement or to give evidence on oath (see Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), s 1 (h), which provides that nothing in that Act is to affect the provisions of s. 18 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), or any right of the person charged to make a statement without being sworn).

(a) Only one speech on the facts on each side is generally allowed (compare Dymock v Watkins (1883), 10 Q. B. D 451, C A.). But there is no express provision on this point in the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), as there is in the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 43), s 14.

630 The examining justices have jurisdiction to decide all questions relating to the admission or rejection of evidence that is tendered before them. If they exercise this jurisdiction and admit or reject evidence, the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice will not interfere to direct the justices as to the course they should pursue, if, however, they have jurisdiction to hear evidence and decline jurisdiction, the King's Bench Division may grant a mandamus to them to hear and determine the question whether the evidence should be admitted (d)

the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), there was no provision for securing the attendance or taking the depositions of witnesses for the defence (see ibid, s 16), but see opinion of Cockburn, A-G, Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure, 9th ed, p 346. The provisions of s 16 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), relating to the summoning and enforcing the attendance and commitment of witnesses for the prosecution were applied to witnesses for the defence by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 35), s 4. As to the depositions of witnesses for the defence, see ibid, s 3. As to expenses of witnesses for the defence, see Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), ss 1, 3. Before the passing of the Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 60), it was held that in taking an examination on a charge of maliciously publishing a defamatory libel under the Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict c 96), a justice had no jurisdiction to receive evidence of the truth of the libel (R v Carden (1879), 5 Q B D 1). This remains the law as regards any charge of libel, except a charge against a proprietor, publisher or editor, or any person responsible for the publication of a newspaper for a libel published therein. When the charge is against such a person, and is in respect of a libel published in a newspaper, the justice or justices may since the passing of the Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 60) receive evidence as to the publication being for the public benefit, and as to the matter charged in the libel being true, and as to the report being fair and accurate and published without malice, and as to any other matter which under that or any other Act or otherwise might be given in evidence by way of defence by the person charged on his trial on indictment (ibid, s 4). As to definition of newspaper, see ibid, s 1. See also title LIBEL AND SLANDER.

(c) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 35), s 3, and see R v Carden (1879), 5 Q B D 1. If the accused has witnesses as to the facts, they ought to be called before the examining justices, evidence for the defence which is heard for the first time at the trial is, in the absence of explanation, open to grave suspicion (R v Humphries (1903), 67 J P 396, and Anon (1870), 48 L T Jo 367, per HANNEN, J, R v McNair (1909), 25 T L R 228, C C A). Magistrates ought not to discourage the accused from calling his witnesses (R v Hendry (1909), 25 T L R 635, C C A). A defendant cannot get legal aid under the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903 (3 Edw 7, c 38), unless it appears that having regard to the nature of the defence set up by him as disclosed in the evidence given or statement made by him before the committing justices (ibid, s 1 (1)), it is desirable that he should have legal aid.

(d) R v Carden (1879), 5 Q B D 1, per COCKBURN, O J, at p 5. The decision of the justices on questions of evidence in no way binds the court which afterwards tries the accused, if he is committed for trial. The court may admit evidence which the justices have rejected and reject evidence which they have admitted. If inadmissible evidence has been admitted by the justices and appears on the deposition of any witness, and such deposition is read in evidence at the trial, the part of the deposition which contains the

631 If from the absence of witnesses or from any other reasonable cause it is necessary or advisable to defer the examination or further examination of the witnesses, the examining justices may by warrant remand the accused in custody from time to time for such time, not exceeding eight days, as the justices may in their discretion think reasonable (c)

If the remand is for a time not exceeding three clear days, the accused may be remanded by a verbal order of the examining justices to the custody of a constable or other person in whose custody the accused may then be, such order directs such constable or any other constable or person named to keep the accused in his custody and to bring him before the same or such other justice or justices as shall be there acting at the time appointed for continuing the examination (c)

If the remand is for a time exceeding three clear days, the examining justices are to make out a warrant remanding the accused to some prison or place of security in the county etc for which the justices act, the examining justices may order the accused to be brought before him or them, or before any other justice or justices for the same county etc, at any time before the expiration of the time for which the accused is remanded (c)

inadmissible evidence may be rejected, but if justices reject evidence which ought to be admitted, and refuse to commit on this ground, there is no way of questioning their decision except by the prosecutor applying for a fresh summons for the same offence or applying to be bound over to prosecute under the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 17) if that Act applies, and, if it does not, by preferring an indictment before a grand jury.

(c) Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s. 21, Schedule Form Q 1 (warrant remanding accused), Q 2 (recognisance), Q 3 (notice of recognisance to the accused and his sureties), Q 4 (certificate of non-appearance). As to persons whom it is intended to send to a reformatory school, see Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s. 63. It is doubtful whether the limit of eight days for a remand applies, when an accused person is on bail, it has been suggested that in such a case an adjournment may take place for a longer period than eight days (see Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure, 9th ed., p. 367). A justice cannot adjourn the hearing of a summons for libel on the ground that civil proceedings between different parties for a different libel arising out of the same matter are pending (R v. Evans (1890), 62 L. T 570),

If the justices are of opinion that a prima facie case has not been made out against the accused by evidence entitled to a reasonable degree of credit, they must forthwith order him to be discharged as to the information then under inquiry. and see title LIBEL AND SLANDER. It is also doubtful whether in case of the refusal of justices to bail on remand in the case of a misdemeanour an application can be made to the King's Bench Division for bail. It has been decided that the right which a person charged with a misdemeanour has to be bailed by the King's Bench Division does not arise till after committal (see Ex parte Mullins (1884), Douglas Summary Jurisdiction Procedure, 9th ed., p. 365, and see R v Bennett (1870), 49 L T Jo 387; R v Atkins (1870), 49 L T Jo 421). But see R v Manning (1888), 5 T L R 139, where on the refusal of a justice to grant bail on remand an application for bail was made to the High Court and the case was remitted to the justice with a direction to admit to bail. In R v Spilsbury, [1898] 2 Q B 615, at p. 622, it was said that it is not the usual practice for the King's Bench Division to admit to bail during remand.

As to the meaning of the expression 'committed for trial' in every Act passed after the 1st January, 1890, see Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 27. If the examination has been begun before one justice sitting alone and he dies or is otherwise incapacitated before all the evidence is heard, another justice must hear the evidence afresh. As to the procedure in such a case, see Ex parte Bottomley (1909), 25 T L R 371.

The examining justices must, in considering whether the accused should or should not be committed for trial, take into account any evidence that is given for the defence. There may be cases where the evidence for the prosecution is sufficient to justify a commitment, e.g., where it raises a presumption of guilt, as is the case where on a charge of larceny possession of stolen goods soon after a theft is proved against the accused. In such a case the presumption of guilt may be rebutted by the evidence for the defence, e.g., if an accused person found in possession of goods recently stolen gives a satisfactory account of his coming into possession of them, and although the justices have not to try the case, yet, if the evidence for the defence is such in their opinion that there is a strong or probable presumption that the jury would acquit the accused, if he were committed, they should dismiss the charge (R v Carden (1879), 5 Q B D 1, per COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 6, see as to libel, Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 60), s. 4, and as to offences under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 16 of that Act). As to the duty of the justices either to commit or to dismiss, and as to their convicting summarily for a minor offence, see Re Thompson (1860), 30 L J (M. C.) 19.

which the indictment ought to be preferred, in the same manner as he would have done if he had committed the accused (i).

635. The examining justices before whom any witness has been examined on a charge in respect of which the accused may be committed for trial may bind every such witness by recognisance to appear at the court at which the accused is to be tried to give evidence at such court, they may also bind the prosecutor by recognisance to appear at such court and to prosecute, or, if he is a witness, to prosecute and give evidence (k).

636 The recognisances of the witnesses, together with the written information (if any), the depositions, the statement of the accused, and the recognisances of bail (if any) are to be delivered, or caused to be delivered, by the examining justices to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be had, before or at its opening, on the first day of the sitting of the court or at such other time as the judge, recorder, or justice who is to preside in the court at the trial may appoint (l).

(k) Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 20, as to form of recognisance see ibid, Schedule, Form O (1). The recognisance is in writing, but is orally acknowledged by the person who enters into it, it must be taken before and signed by a justice or justices. The person who enters into a recognisance acknowledges that he owes a specified sum to the King, to be levied on such person's goods and chattels, if he fails in the condition specified. The condition recites the charge on which the accused has been committed, and is to the effect, in the case of a recognisance by a prosecutor, that if he appears at the court at which the accused is to be tried, and there prefers, or causes to be preferred, and prosecutes duly a bill of indictment for the offence charged, the recognisance is to be void, but otherwise it is to stand in force. If the prosecutor is also to give evidence, the recognisance binds him also to give evidence to the grand jury and the petty jury. Witnesses are bound to give evidence in the same way. The recognisance must specify the profession, trade etc of the person bound over, his christian name and surname, the parish etc where he resides, and, if he resides in a city, town or borough, the name of the street and the number (if any) of the house where he resides, and whether he is owner or tenant of or a lodger in such house (ibid, s 20, and Schedule, Form O (1)). Notice of the recognisance signed by the justice or justices is at the same time to be given to the person bound (ibid, Schedule, Form O (2)). The usual practice in taking recognisances is for the person who is to be bound to enter orally into the recognisance before the officer of the court who takes a minute of it, the recognisance need not be formally drawn up till afterwards (Ex parte Jeffreys (1888), 52 J P 250). The prosecutor is the person who appears before the justices to support the charge, if such person is willing to be bound over, it is irregular to bind over anyone else to prosecute, and the person who appeared as prosecutor before the justices is entitled to the conduct of the subsequent proceedings (R v Bushell (1888), 16 Cox, C O 367). The person who is properly bound over to prosecute has the conduct of the subsequent proceedings, and, if he is willing to carry them on, no one else, except, perhaps, the Director of Public Prosecutions, can intervene to take the conduct out of his hands (see R v Yates (1857), 7 Cox, C O 361, R v Ottewill, Times, 24th November, 1891, p 6, R v Taylor, Times, 2nd November, 1890, p 7).

(l) Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 20. The recognisances, depositions etc should be delivered as soon as practicable after the accused has been committed for trial, or at such time as to enable the judge etc. to read and master the contents of the depositions, before he charges the grand jury (see two letters from the Home Office to Justices' Clerks of 29th December, 1886, and 12th May, 1891). 640 Instead of committing the accused to prison the examining justices may in all cases except treason admit him to bail to appear at the court at which his trial is to take place (r).

accused to bail.

In cases of treason no person can be admitted to bail, except by order of one of the Secretaries of State or by the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice or a judge thereof in vacation (s). All other crimes are, as regards bail, divided into two classes by statute (s). One class consists of felonies and certain specified misdemeanours, the other embraces all other misdemeanours (s).

With respect to the first class, the justices have a discretion whether they shall admit to bail or not, but it is not usual to grant bail in cases of murder.

Discretion of

As to the second class, it seems that the justices have discretion

As to commitment for trial at the Central Criminal Court, see Central Criminal Court (Prisons) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 64). As to commitment of prisoners in counties of cities or towns corporate within which there is no commission of over and terminer and gaol delivery directed to be executed, see Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36), s. 19. As to the expenses of constables in conveying prisoners, see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), ss. 22, 26, and Schedule, Forms R (2) and T (2).

(r) Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), s. 23. If the justices decide to grant bail, they are to take the recognisances of the accused and of his sureties (ibid, Schedule, Form S (1), (2)), the condition of such recognisance is that the accused will appear at the time and place of trial, and that he will then surrender and take his trial and not depart the court without leave. Sureties may be dispensed with, if in the opinion of the justices this can be done without tending to defeat the ends of justice (Bail Act, 1898 (61 Vict. c. 7), s. 1). The effect of granting bail is not to set the accused free, but to release him from the custody of the law and to intrust him to the custody of his sureties, who are bound to produce him to answer on his trial at a specified time and place (2 Hawk P. C. c. 15, s. 3, 138). The sureties may seize their principal at any time (Ann. (1704), 6 Mod. Rep. 231, ex parte Lyme (1822), 3 Stark 132, Foxhall v Barnett (1803), 23 L. J. (q. n.) 7), and may discharge themselves by handing him over to the custody of the law, and the accused will then be imprisoned, unless he obtains fresh bail. The sureties should be of ability sufficient to answer the sum in which they are bound (2 Hawk P. C. c. 15, s. 4, 139). A contract by the accused or someone else to indemnify a surety against liability under his recognisance is illegal (Herman v Seuchner (1881), 15 Q. B. 1561, C. A., Consolidated Exploration and Finance Co v Musgrave, [1900] 1 Ch. 37). As to bail during remand, see p. 319, ante.

In exercising their discretion with regard to bail the justices have to consider the nature of the offence, the strength of the evidence, the character or behaviour of the accused, and the

(t) Ibid The misdemeanours in the first class are —Assault with attempt to commit a felony, attempt to commit a felony, if the attempt is a misdemeanour (see p 259, ante), obtaining or attempting to obtain property by false pretences, receiving stolen property, when the theft is a misdemeanour, or receiving property obtained by false pretences (see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 95), perjury, subornation of perjury, concealing the birth of a child, wilful or indecent exposure of the person, riot, assault upon a peace officer in the execution of his duty, or upon any person acting in his aid, neglect or breach of duty as a peace officer, and any misdemeanour for the prosecution of which the costs may be allowed out of the county rate (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 23) It is not clear what is the meaning of the words "any misdemeanour for the prosecution of which the costs may be allowed out of the county rate", those words may mean the misdemeanours for the prosecution of which the costs at the time of the passing of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), might have been allowed out of the county rate or they may mean misdemeanours for the prosecution of which the costs may under any statute subsequently passed be so allowed At the time of the passing of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), the only misdemeanours for the prosecution of which costs were allowed out of the county rate were the misdemeanours specified in s 23 of the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 64), these are the same as those specified in the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 23, with the exception of attempting to obtain property by false pretences and concealment of the birth of a child, which do not appear in s 23 of the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 64) No misdemeanours are specified in s 23 of the Act of 1826 which are not specified in s 23 of the Indictable Offences Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), and therefore the words "which may be allowed out of the county rate" are meaningless, if they refer only to misdemeanours the costs of the prosecution of which might be so allowed at the time of the passing of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), for there were no such misdemeanours not specified in s 23 of that Act It seems, therefore, that the words in question relate to misdemeanours the costs of the prosecution of which may be allowed under any subsequent statute If this is so, the effect of subsequent legislation has been to repeal or make almost meaningless that part of s 23 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), which gives a right to bail to persons accused of misdemeanours other than those specified in the first part of s 23 By the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 16), s. 1, the costs in the prosecution of all offences may now be allowed out of the county rate, except offences relating to the non-repair or obstruction of a highway, public bridge, or navigable river (ibid., s 9 (3) As it is not usual to commence prosecutions for such offences before justices, the effect of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), seems to be that in all indictable cases which ordinarily come before justices they have a discretion as to the granting of bail

If a justice is satisfied with the pecuniary sufficiency of the sureties offered, he cannot reject them because of their character or political opinions (R v Badger (1843), 4 Q B 468). As to refusing bail to accomplices, see R v Beardmore (1836), 7 C & P 497, per PAITSON, J, at p 499. It is inexpedient to admit the solicitor for the accused as a surety (R v Scott Jervis, Tames, 20th November, 1876). Excessive bail ought not to be required (Bill of Rights, 1 Will & Mar sess 2, c 2). A justice may be indicted, if he refuses bail from improper motives (R v Badger (1843), 4 Q B 468, at p 472), or sued, if he does so maliciously (Linford v Fitzroy (1849), 13 Q B 240, at p 247). In deciding questions relating to the granting of bail justices act judicially, and not ministerially (Linford v Fitzroy, supra).

(d) Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 23. Bail may be granted after commitment by the committing justices, or if they are of opinion that the accused ought to be admitted to bail, they are to certify on the back of the warrant of commitment (see Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), Schedule, Form S (3)) their consent to the granting of bail, and to state the amount of bail which ought to be required, on the production of such certificate any justice attending or being at the prison where the accused is in custody may admit him to bail. If it is inconvenient for the surety or sureties to attend at the prison to join with the accused in the recognisance, the committing justices may make a duplicate of such certificate (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), Schedule, Form S (4)), and, on such certificate being produced to any justice for the same county etc., such last-mentioned justice may take the recognisance of such surety or sureties in conformity with the certificate. On such recognisance being transmitted to the keeper of the prison and produced, together with the certificate on the back of the warrant of commitment, to any justice attending or being at the prison, such last-mentioned justice may take the recognisance of the accused and order him to be discharged out of custody. In cases where the accused has a right to be admitted to bail by justices (but see p 324, note (t), ante), and he has been committed to prison, on his applying to be bailed to any visiting justice of the prison or to any other justice of the same county etc., before the first day of the sitting or session at which he is to be tried, or before the day to which such sitting or session may be adjourned, such justice must accordingly admit him to bail. In all cases where an accused person in custody has been admitted to bail by a justice other than the committing justice, the justice who admits him to bail must forthwith transmit the recognisance or recognisances of bail to the committing justices or one of them to be transmitted with the depositions to the proper officer (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c 42), s 23). If a justice admits to bail any person in prison charged with the offence for which he is admitted to bail, such justice must send or cause to be lodged with the keeper of the prison a warrant of deliverance (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict 42), Schedule, Form S (5)), under his hand and seal, requiring the keeper to discharge such person, if he be detained for no other offence, and upon such warrant being delivered to or lodged with the keeper, he is forthwith to obey it (Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c 42), s 24).

Jo. 93, R v Rees, Times, 20th December, 1888, p. 10, R v Quigley (1888), 18 L. T. 211. If a notice in writing is not served on the person against whom the evidence is to be used, or if the deposition does not contain a proper caption, the deposition cannot be read in evidence under the Act, but it may be admissible in evidence as a dying declaration, if it satisfies the conditions of such a declaration (R v Quigley, supra). The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), s. 7, makes provision for the conveyance of the accused from prison to be present at the taking of the deposition. Such a deposition, if not taken in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), s. 6, but taken in accordance with the provisions of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), s. 17 (R v Katz (1900), 64 J. P. 807), is only admissible in evidence when the justice who takes the deposition is one of the justices who commit (R v Rees, supra). And see p. 365, post.

If the statement of the witness relates to any indictable offence for which any accused person is already committed or bailed to appear for trial, the justice is to transmit the statement, with the caption above referred to, to the proper officer of the court at which the accused is to be tried. In all other cases he is to transmit the statement to the clerk of the peace of the county etc. in which he took it, and such clerk of the peace is required to preserve the statement and file it as of record (o)

646 On proof that the witness who has made such statement is dead or that there is no reasonable probability that he will ever be able to travel or to give evidence, and that proper notice was served upon the person against whom it is proposed to use the evidence, and that he or his counsel or solicitor had or might have had, if he had chosen to be present, full opportunity of cross-examining the witness, the statement, if it purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken, may without further proof be read in evidence either for or against the accused (o).

Taking

647 There are similar powers under the Children Act, 1908 (p), for the taking and using of the deposition of a child in respect of whom an offence under Part II of that Act or under other specified Acts (q) is alleged to have been committed, if a justice is satisfied by the evidence of a registered medical practitioner that the attendance before a court of any such child would involve serious danger to its life or health (r)

SUB-SECT. 7 — Costs

Costs.

(s) Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 1. This Act came into force on the 1st January, 1909 (ibid., s. 10 (2)), and repealed the provisions of most of the Acts relating to costs in criminal cases (ibid., s. 10 (1) and schedule). The costs which may be directed to be paid under the Act are such sums as, subject to the regulations of a Secretary of State under the Act (ibid., s. 5), appear to the court reasonably sufficient to compensate the prosecutor for the expenses properly incurred by him in carrying on the prosecution, and to compensate any person properly attending to give evidence for the prosecution or defence, or called to give evidence at the instance of the court, for the expense, trouble, or loss of time properly incurred in or incidental to the attendance and giving of evidence, the amount of the costs is to be ascertained as soon as practicable by the proper officer of the court (ibid., s. 1 (2)). The proper officer in the case of proceedings before examining justices is, it seems, the justices' clerk. As soon as the amount due to any person is ascertained by the proper officer, he is to pay forthwith to such person the amount due for travelling or personal expenses in respect of his attendance to give evidence, and, so far as the amount is not due in respect of attendance to give evidence, is to forward a certificate of the amount in the case of a committal to the proper officer of the court to which the defendant is committed, and in any other

indictment.

649. In the trial of crimes which are not summarily dealt with it is now the almost invariable practice to proceed by way of indictment (t) There are alternative modes of proceeding by way of impeachment in the case of some crimes (u), and in case of some misdemeanours by way of information filed in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, but such modes of proceeding are now rarely used (v) to the clerk of the peace of the county or place for which the justices act Any amount so paid by the proper officer to any person in respect of his attendance to give evidence is to be reimbursed to that officer by the treasurer of the county or borough out of the funds out of which the same is payable under the Act. The certificate forwarded in the case of a committal is to be laid before the court to which the defendant is committed by the officer of the court, a certificate forwarded in any other case is to be laid before the next court of quarter sessions, in either case the court is to consider the certificate and order the treasurer of the county or borough to pay out of the funds from which the amount is payable the amount certified, or any less amount which the court considers should have been allowed (ibid, s 3) In the case of offences committed, or supposed to have been, in a county borough, the costs are payable out of the borough fund or borough rate, and, in the case of other offences, out of the county fund of the administrative county (see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT) in which the offence is committed or supposed to have been committed For the purposes of this provision offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty (see p 273, ante) are to be deemed to have been committed in the place where the offender is prosecuted or tried, or when the offender is tried at the Central Criminal Court in the county of London, but costs paid in the case of these offences out of any county or borough fund are to be repaid out of moneys provided by Parliament (ibid, s 4 (1)) The Act applies to all indictable offences except those relating to the non-repair or obstruction of any highway, public bridge, or navigable river (ibid, ss 1, 9 (3)) but does not affect the operation of any enactment in force providing for the payment of the costs of the prosecution or defence of an indictable offence out of any assets, money or funds, other than local funds, or by any person other than the prosecutor or defendant (ibid, s 8) As to costs where a person is committed for trial and not ultimately tried, see ibid, s 7, and as to costs where a prosecutor is bound over under the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 17), see p 447, post, Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 9 (2) As to the meaning of "prosecutor," see ibid, s 9 (1), and of "committed for trial," see Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 63), s 27, and p 320, ante For the regulations made under s 5 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), see [1908] W N 343

(t) In prosecutions for a corrupt and illegal practice at an election the accused persons may be tried summarily before an election court, or on indictment, the latter is the more usual method (see title ELECTIONS) A person may be punished for contempt of court either summarily or on indictment (see title CONTEMPT OF COURT, Vol VII, p 280) As to other summary proceedings before the High Court, see pp 497, note (g), and 528, post.

(v) There has been no instance of impeachment since 1806, see p 265, ante. There are two kinds of information in criminal cases —(1) An information ex officio filed by the King's Attorney-General or (if the office of King's Attorney-General is vacant) by the King's Solicitor-General (R v Wilkes (1770), 19 State Tr 1075) for such enormous misdemeanours as tend to disturb or endanger the King's government, or to molest or affront him in the discharge of his royal functions (4 Bl Com. 304). It is filed without any leave of the court. Infor-

650 A person charged by the verdict of a coroner's jury with murder or manslaughter must, if he is in custody, be arraigned on the inquisition before the court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery to which the inquisition is returned, but the practice in the case of such a verdict is to prefer a bill of indictment for murder or manslaughter before the grand jury, and if the bill is found, to arraign and try the accused on the indictment and on the inquisition together. If no bill is preferred, or if a bill is preferred and

No information ex officio has been filed in England in recent years, the last instance is said to be that of R v Cate and Tarry (1887), Archbold's Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed., 143.

(2) An information by the Master of the Crown Office at the instance of a private person. It requires the leave of the court, which is only granted for gross and notorious misdemeanours which do not specially concern the State, but which on account of their magnitude deserve public animadversion (stat. 4 & 5 Will & Mar c 18 ss 1, 5, 4 BL Com 304, and see R v Labouchere (1884), 12 Q. B D 320). Such informations in cases of libels can only be granted at the instance of some persons who are in some public office or position (R v Labouchere, supra), and are seldom granted (see R v Labouchere, supra, and Shortt on Informations, 12). The modern practice is to proceed by way of indictment, all offences for which informations were formerly issued were always also triable by indictment. For recent instances of criminal informations at the instance of justices, see R. v. Masters (1889), 6 T. L. R. 44, R. v. Russell (1905), 23 L. T. 407.

ignored, it is the practice to arraign the accused formally on the coroner's inquisition before a petty jury and to direct such jury to acquit him. An accused person may be tried before a petty jury on a coroner's inquisition (x), but this course is very rarely adopted.

SECT. 1.
Preferring

651 At common law any person may prefer a bill of indictment before a grand jury against anyone whom he accuses of committing an indictable crime, and that without any previous inquiry before justices or any leave of any judge or any notice to the person against whom the indictment was presented. This right still exists, except where it has been taken away or restricted by statute, but the usual practice is only to prefer a bill of indictment after laying an information before justices of the peace sitting in petty sessions (y).

652 For offences to which the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (a), applies, except in the cases therein mentioned, no bill of indictment can be presented to or found by a grand jury—(1) unless the prosecutor or other person presenting the indictment has been

A conviction for murder or manslaughter on a coroner's inquisition without an indictment found by a grand jury is said to be unknown in practice (4 Bl. Com. 301 (16th ed.), note by COLERIDGE, quoted arg. in R v Ingham (1864), 5 B. & S. 257, at p. 260). But a woman arraigned and tried for the murder of her child on a coroner's inquisition after the grand jury had thrown out the bill has been found guilty of concealment of birth (R v Maynard, supra, R v Cole, supra).

(y) See p. 290, ante. In prosecutions against a bankrupt or any other person for any statutory misdemeanour in cases of bankruptcy a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy may commit the bankrupt or such other person for trial, and no preliminary inquiry before justices in such a case is required (Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 165, see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II, p. 352). In criminal proceedings against a corporation (see pp. 239, 313, ante) and in proceedings by way of indictment 'or the non-repair or obstruction of highways, bridges etc. and for other offences it is not usual to have a preliminary examination before justices, and in such proceedings the presenting of an indictment is the first step.

(a) 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17. These offences are perjury and subornation of perjury, conspiracy, obtaining money or other property by false pretences, keeping a gambling house or a disorderly house, indecent assault (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1), misdemeanours under Part II. of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), altered by the Bankruptcy Acts 1883 and 1890 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, s. 163, 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 26), see Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 18, and Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 165, libel (Newspaper and Label Registration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 60), s. 6), misdemeanours under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 17, and the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 35, and offences punishable on indictment under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 13. An attempt to obtain property by false pretences is not within the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17) (R v Burton (1875), 13 Cox. C. 71, O. C. R.). Giving false evidence before a naval court-martial held under the Naval Discipline Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), is perjury within the meaning of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17). See Naval Discipline Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), s. 67 of which solves the doubts that were expressed in R v Heane (1864), 4 B. & S. 947, as regards a prosecution under the Naval Discipline Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 115), and, it seems, makes the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17), applicable to a prosecution for false evidence given out of England at a naval court-martial held under the Naval Discipline Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109). 653. If on the preliminary hearing before justices for an offence to which the Act applies the justices refuse to commit the accused or to bail him to be tried for such an offence, and the prosecutor desires to prefer an indictment for such an offence, the justices must take the recognisance of the prosecutor to prosecute the charge and transmit the recognisance with the information and depositions to the court in which the indictment ought to be preferred (d),

(b) The persons so authorised are judges of the superior courts, any of the commissioners of assize, nisi prius, oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, any justices of the peace, recorder or deputy recorder, chairman or other judge holding any general or quarter sessions of the peace, any judge or deputy judge of any county court or any court of record, any justice of the peace in special or petty sessions, or any sheriff or his lawful deputy before whom any writ of inquiry or writ of trial from any of the superior courts is executed (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 19, see p 496, post)

(c) Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 17), s 1 Justices of the peace for a county have power to act generally throughout the county in the commission of the peace for which their names are placed, and there is nothing in this Act or elsewhere that prevents the justices who ordinarily act in one petty sessional division from committing a person for trial in respect of an act arising in another petty sessional division (R v Buckley (1867), 20 Q B D 187, (C O R) If three persons are bound over to appear and answer an indictment for conspiracy and the Attorney-General gives his fiat for the prosecution of a fourth person and an indictment is subsequently preferred against all four, such an indictment is valid (Knowlton v R (1864), 33 L J (M C) 219) If an indictment contains two counts, one relating to the charge to which the commitment relates and a second count relating to another charge, the second count, unless it comes within s 1 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 35) (see p 333, note (h) post), ought to be quashed, and if it is not quashed and evidence is given relating to the second count which is not admissible as evidence relating to the first count and the accused is convicted, the conviction is bad (R v Kirdge (1864), L & C 390)

(d) Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 17), s 2 If there is a substantial charge made bona fide and it is within the jurisdiction of the justices and the justices dismiss the charge on the ground that there is no evidence to support it, the justices must take the recognisance of the prosecutor, if he offers to be bound (R v London Corporation (1886), 16 Cox, C C 77) If the justices refuse to take the recognisance in such a case, a mandamus will lie to compel them to do so (ibid) If no indictable offence is disclosed in the information, the justices should not take the recognisance and cannot be compelled to do so (Ex parte Watson (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 578). If a summons is heard and dismissed and no application is made by the prosecutor to be bound over to prosecute, and the prosecutor lays a second information for the same subject-matter, and the justices refuse to take this information, they are within their right, and they cannot on such a second application be called upon to bind the prosecutor over (R v Bather (1880), 44 J. P. 490). The Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17), s. 2 has no application, except when the accused has been charged before justices If no summons or warrant is issued, no application an indictment may then be preferred in spite of the refusal of the justices to commit the accused for trial (e).

Any count or counts relating to offences to which the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (f), applies may be joined with other counts in an indictment, if apart from that Act they may be lawfully joined (g), and if in the opinion of the court before which the indictment is preferred, such count or counts are founded upon the facts or evidence disclosed in any examinations or depositions taken before a justice of the peace in the presence of the person accused and duly transmitted to such court, and nothing in the Act is to prevent such indictment being found, if it is presented to the grand jury with the consent of such court (h).

can be made under s 2 (Ex parte Reid (1885), 49 J P 600) If a prosecutor is bound over, and does not prefer an indictment to the grand jury of the court at which he is bound over to prosecute, the recognisance lapses and cannot, it seems, be enlarged, and no indictment can be preferred to a subsequent court (R v Layres (1900), 64 J P 217) If the justices refuse to commit and no application is made to them for the binding over of the prosecutor, the direction of a judge of the High Court of Justice or the fiat of the Attorney General or Solicitor-General may be obtained, and an indictment may then be preferred (R v Rogers (1902), 96 J P 825) In the case of a prosecution for perjury the direction of a judge etc to prosecute may be given after the lapse of an interval (e.g., a fortnight) after the trial at which the perjury is alleged to have been committed, and no previous summons or notice to the accused or affidavit of the facts is necessary (R v Bray (1862), 3 B & S 255, in which a report in the Times newspaper of the trial was laid before the judge to refresh his memory, and he wrote on it "I consent to the prosecution in this case," and this was held to be sufficient within the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 17))

of indictment

The result of the presentment of an indictment which is sufficient in law is that the person or persons accused, if and when they are in custody, are called upon to plead to the indictment, that is, to say whether they are guilty or not guilty of the crime or crimes alleged. No person can be called upon to plead to an indictment which is not sufficient in law (l)

What an
must contain

656 In order to be sufficient in law an indictment (1) must contain at the beginning a marginal note which describes the venue or the area of jurisdiction of the court to which the indictment is presented (m), (2) it must commence with an allegation that it is presented on oath by a grand jury (n), (3) it must proceed to aver that the person or persons accused have committed the particular crime or crimes alleged, and it must set out all the ingredients of the offence charged, the facts, circumstances, and intent which constitute the crime, and must do this with certainty and without repugnancy or duplicity (o)

(i) As to these offences, see title MAGISTRATES. The offences for which an indictment lies are set out in Parts X to XIII, pp 450 et seq., post, and see p 271, ante

(k) See R v Waters (1848), 1 Den 356. As to the cases in which separate crimes can be alleged in one indictment or in one count, see p 342, post

(l) As to the amendment of indictments, see p 344, post

(m) E.g., the note is usually in this form,

Borough of Wolverhampton	}	in the case of an indictment found by a grand jury of a borough at the borough quarter sessions (see p 267, ante , and Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 23)
to wit

Want of a proper or perfect venue does not now vitiate an indictment (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100) s 23). As to venue, see p 279, ante

(n) The beginning of an indictment is in this form, "The jurors for our lord the King upon their oaths present that." The words "for our lord the King" are not essential (see R v Turner (1839), 2 Mood. & R 214, Broome v R (1848), 12 Q B 834, Ex Ch). If there are more counts than one, each count after the first begins "And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid do further present that" etc

indicted

657. The indictment must aver with certainty who is the person indicted. It should set out his christian name and surname, but it is sufficient to give the name by which he is usually known, and if he is known by two names, both may be given (p). It is not necessary to give either the "addition" (i. e., occupation) or the place of abode of the person accused (q).

If a corporation is indicted, its proper corporate name must be given (r).

The inhabitants of a parish who are indicted for non-repair of a highway or of a county for non-repair of a bridge may be indicted under the name of the inhabitants of the particular parish or of the particular county (s).

If the name of the person accused is unknown, he must be identified in some way, e. g., by describing him as "a person whose name is to the jurors unknown, but who is personally brought before the jurors by the keeper of the prison." It is not sufficient to describe such a person as one whose name is to the jurors unknown (t).

658 If the alleged crime is one that has been committed against the person or property of some one, the name and surname of the person injured should be stated with reasonable certainty (a).

ed, 55. No indictment is insufficient for want of any matter unnecessary to be proved, or for the omission of such formal expressions as "as appears by the record," or "with force and arms," or "against the peace," or for the insertion of the words "against the form of the statute" instead of "against the form of the statutes," or vice versa, or because a person mentioned in an indictment is designated by a name of office or other descriptive appellation instead of his proper name, or for omitting to state the time at which an offence was committed, in a case when time is not of the essence, or for stating the time imperfectly, or for stating the offence to have been committed on a day subsequent to the finding of the indictment, or on an impossible day, or on a day that never happened, or for want of a proper or perfect venue or of a proper or formal conclusion, or for want of or imperfection in the addition of any defendant, or for the want of the statement of the value or price of any matter, or the amount of damage, injury, or spoil in any case where the value or price or the amount of damage, injury, or spoil is not of the essence of the offence (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 24).

It seems that the provisions of s 24 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), allowing the designation of any person mentioned in an indictment "by a name of office or other descriptive appellation" do not apply to the case of a person indicted, and that a person indicted cannot be so designated, see R v Great Western Rail Co (Directors) (1888), 20 Q B D 410. If the name of the person indicted is misdescribed, the mistake may be amended, but only by the court that tries the indictment (R v Great Western Rail Co (Directors), supra).

ownership of property

If the name of the person injured is unknown, he may be described as "a person to the jurors aforesaid unknown" (b).

In respect of offences against property it is as a general rule essential that the indictment should allege who is the owner of the property, and that the property belongs to someone other than the defendant (c).

A mistake in the description of the owner of property may be amended, but, if it is not amended, or if the averment of ownership is omitted altogether in a case when it is essential, the indictment is bad. If the owner of the property is unknown, the indictment should describe the property as belonging to a person to the jurors unknown (d).

sary to state
age.

659. A statement of the age of the person accused or of the person injured is unnecessary (e), except where it is an essential ingredient of the particular offence that the person committing the offence or the person injured should be of any particular age (f), in such case the indictment and every count thereof must state that the person is of that age (g).

Time.

660 It is usual to insert the date on which the crime charged is alleged to have been committed, but it is only necessary to do so where time is of the essence of the offence (h). In such case, the

If the person injured has a name of dignity (e.g., if he is a peer or baronet or knight) the name of dignity should be given (see R v Pitts (1839), 8 C & P 771, R v Graham (1791), 2 Leach, 517, R v Brinklett (1828), 3 C & P 416, Anon (1698), 2 Salk 451, R v Gregory (1846), 6 Q B 508, R v Frost (1805), Dears C C 474). A person may be designated by a name of office or other descriptive appellation instead of by his proper name (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 21). A mistake in the name or description of any person named or described in an indictment may be amended by the court that tries the indictment (ibid, s 1).

In an indictment for arson under ss 2 and 3 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), it is unnecessary to aver to whom the house etc belongs (R v Neubolt (1872), L. R 1 C. C. R 344), and see under the specific offences, post.

(d) It is chiefly in regard to indictments for larceny that questions have arisen with regard to the proper description of the owner of property (see p 645, post).

(e) It is not necessary to allege that the person accused is above the age of seven years, for although no person under that age can be convicted of a crime, yet the fact that a person is over that age is not an essential ingredient of any particular offence, but is a condition of liability common to all crimes (see p 239, ante).

Place.

661 It is not necessary to state the place where an offence is alleged to have been committed except in the case of crimes in respect of which a local description is required (k), but it is usual to do so in order that the taxing officer may see upon what county or borough treasurer the order for payment of the costs should be made.

662 The facts, circumstances, and intent which constitute the alleged offence must be set out with such certainty that the defendant may be able to judge whether they constitute an indictable offence or not, and to decide whether to plead to the indictment or to move to quash it, and that he may know what the particular charge against him is and whether he has been previously convicted or acquitted of the same charge, and that he may essence of the offence—(1) when an act is only criminal if done after or within a certain time after some other act or event, e.g., some of the offences under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), Part II, s. 11 (see title BANKRUPTCY, Vol. II, p. 345), (2) when it is an essential ingredient of a particular offence that certain consequences should follow a particular act—e.g., in murder and manslaughter it is essential to prove that the death of the person alleged to be murdered or killed took place within a year and a day from the time when the act which caused the death was committed (in such a case the time stated in the indictment should be the day on which such act was done), (3) when it is an essential ingredient of a particular offence that the alleged act or acts should be committed between certain hours of the day, e.g., burglary, night poaching, making signals to smuggling vessels, (4) when the prosecution for a particular crime must be commenced within a certain time of the commission of the alleged criminal act (see p. 294, ante).

(i) In an indictment for burglary it is sufficient to allege that the act was committed "in the night" (1 Hale, P. C. 549, 2 Haw. P. C., c. 25, ss. 76, 77, but see R. v. Waddington (1771), 2 East, P. C. 513), or even that the offence was committed "burglariously" (R. v. Thompson (1847), 2 Cox, C. C. 377). So in an indictment for night poaching it is sufficient to allege that the offence was committed by night without mentioning the hour (Davis v. R. (1829), 10 B. & C. 86). As to the averment of time in an indictment for an offence for the prosecution of which a time is limited, see R. v. Brown (1828), 1 Mood. & M. 103. As to indictments for larceny or embezzlement where several distinct acts, not exceeding three, against the same person may be joined together in one indictment, if committed within six months from the first to the last of those acts, see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 5, 6, 71, R. v. Nicholls (1904), 69 J. P. 452, C. O. R., R. v. Lonsdale (1864), 4 F. & F. 56, and p. 648, post.

(k) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 23. Local description is required in indictments for keeping a disorderly house (see p. 541, post), burglary (R. v. Richards (1832), 1 Mood. & R. 177), malicious injury to sea banks etc., maliciously firing a dwelling house (R. v. Woodward (1831), 1 Mood. C. C. 323), forcible entry (R. v. Cranage (1712), 1 Salk. 385), nuisances to highways (R. v. Stevenston (Inhabitants) (1643), 1 Car. & Kir. 55), see Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed., 68, where it is stated that the practice at the Central Criminal Court is to insert the parish in all indictments (see R. v. Connors (1836), 4 Ad. & El. 942, and Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 4).

be able to prepare a defence to meet it, and that the court may know what judgment to pronounce in case of conviction (l)

Where an indictment is in general terms, the court may order the prosecution to deliver to the accused particulars of the matters alleged in the indictment (m)

An indictment for a statutory offence must allege with certainty that the defendant committed or omitted the acts the commission or omission of which is prohibited by statute, and did so in the circumstances and with the intent mentioned in the statute (n)

exemptions

If a statute which creates or defines an offence contains in the enacting clause an exception exempting certain cases from its operation, an indictment for the offence must aver that the particular act or acts alleged were not within the exemption, but if the exception comes in by way of proviso, whether in the same section or in another part of the statute, and the proviso is not in the nature of an exception which is incorporated directly or by reference with the enacting clause, it is not necessary to negative the proviso (n).

(l) See Co Litt 303 a, R v Horne (1777), Cowp 672, R v Rowed (1842), 3 Q B 180, White v R (1876), 13 Cox, C O 318, Taylor v R, [1895] 1 Q. B 25, R v Aspinall (1876), 2 Q B D 48, C A, at p 56, R v Stroulger (1886), 17 Q B D 327, C O R. The degree of particularity required varies with the nature of the offence (see under specific crimes, post). In an indictment for treason the overt acts must be set out (see p 476, post). In an indictment for embezzlement the sums or property embezzled must be particularly described. In an indictment for obtaining property by false pretences the property obtained must be particularly described and the false pretences must be set out (see p 690, post), but in an indictment under the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 95, for receiving goods knowing them to have been obtained by false pretences or under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 62), s 13 (1), for obtaining credit under false pretences the false pretences need not be set out (Taylor v R, [1895] 1 Q B 25, R v Watkinson (1872), 12 Cox, C O 271, C O R, R v Pierre (1887), 16 Cox, C O 213, C O R). In some cases the alleged offence may be described in general terms, e.g., a person may be indicted for barratry, and for keeping a common gaming-house or bawdy-house (l'Anson v Stuart (1787), 1 Term Rep 748, at p 752) or for conspiracy to defraud a person of "divers goods" (Anon (1819), 1 Chit 698, R v Gill (1816), 2 B & Ald 204). An indictment which alleges that the defendant conspired "with divers other persons" must either allege that such persons are unknown or must give their names (R v Perrin (1908), 72 J P 114).

(m) Particulars have been ordered in the case of the following offences: barratry (l'Anson v Stuart, supra, at p 764), nuisance (R v Curwood (1835), 3 Ad & El 810), obstructing a highway (R v Downshire (Marquis) (1835), cited 3 Ad & El 816), embezzlement (R v Hodgson (1828), 3 C & P 422, R v Bootyman (1832), 5 C & P 300), conspiracy (R v Hamilton (1836), 7 C & P 448, R v Lycroft (1852), 6 Cox, C O 76, R v Probert (1852), Dears C O 30, at p 32, n, R v Stapylton (1857), 8 Cox, C O 69).

(n) But see R v James, [1902] 1 K B 541, C O R, where it was held that in an indictment against a wife for stealing the goods of her husband it was not necessary to aver that the defendant was the wife of the prosecutor or that she took the goods which were the subject-matter of the charge when leaving or deserting or about to leave or desert her husband, although the statute (Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c. 75), ss 12, 16) only makes the taking of such goods an offence by the wife when she is leaving etc her husband. An indictment for the misdemeanour of receiving goods stolen by a wife from her husband need not allege that the goods were stolen by the wife from her husband, it is enough to allege that they were stolen (R v Payne, [1906] 1 K B 97, C O R. As to negating exemptions, see R v Earnshaw (1812), 15 East, 456, R v Jarvis (1757), 1 East, 643, n, 646, n, R v Hall (1786), 1 Term Rep 320, R v Pratten (1796), 6 Term Rep 559, R v Baxter

Where any particular intent is a necessary ingredient of an offence, the intent must be stated in the indictment (o)

Where words, written or spoken, are of the essence of an offence, they must be set out verbatim in the indictment, except in the case of an obscene libel (p)

Property which is the subject-matter of an alleged offence must be described in an indictment by the appropriate name (q)

It is not necessary to state the value of any matter or thing mentioned in an indictment or the amount of damage, injury, or spoil, except where such value is of the essence of the offence (r).

If a statute makes the doing of an act "without lawful authority or excuse" criminal, it is sufficient to aver that it was done without lawful authority (R v Hursey (1871), L R 1 O O R. 284)

(o) E.g., in an indictment for forgery or for obtaining property by false pretences it must be alleged that the defendant did the act charged with intent to defraud (see R v James (1871), 12 Cox, C C 127), so in an indictment for setting fire to houses etc. under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 97), s 3, an intent to defraud or injure, as the case may be, must be alleged, but in none of these cases is it necessary to allege an intent to defraud or injure any particular person (see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s 88 (false pretences), Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 97), s 60 (setting fire to houses etc.), as to forgery, see Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 98), s 44 (forgery)). In an indictment for burglary it is necessary to allege either an entry with intent to commit a felony (see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s 51), e.g., "with intent the goods and chattels of one John Smith in the said dwelling-house there being feloniously and burglariously to steal, take and carry away"), or the commission of a felony in a dwelling house and the breaking out of the house in the night, so as to breaking and entering a house with intent to commit a felony therein (see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s 57), or being found by night in any dwelling-house with intent to commit any felony therein, or being found by night armed etc. with the intent to break into a dwelling-house etc. (see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s 58)

(p) See Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c 64), s 7, and see p 538, post)

(q) Great particularity and minuteness of statement as to the description of personal chattels in an indictment were formerly required (see R v Cook (1774), 2 East, P C 616 R v Edwards (1823), Russ. & Ry 497, R v Holloway (1823), 1 O & P 127, R v Loom (1827), 1 Mood C C 180, R v Puddifoot (1829), 1 Mood C C 247, R v Birkel (1830), 4 O & P 216, R v Tate (1833), 1 Law C C 234, R v Cox (1844), 1 Car & Kir 494, R v Lonsdale (1864), 4 F & F 56). But nearly all these cases were before the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c 100), s 1, which gave power to amend a misdescription of property, and their importance has been diminished by that Act. Moreover, it is doubtful whether these older cases would be followed now, even if there were no amendment (see R v Stride and Millard, [1908] 1 K B 617). But a substantial misdescription of property, where a description is essential, will even now, unless amended, make an indictment bad (see R v Sutcliffe (1872), 1 R 2 O C R. 21, where a conviction was quashed because in an indictment under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 97), s 17, for setting fire to a stack of corn the evidence showed that what the defendant set fire to was a quantity of straw on a lorry). Thus an indictment for larceny of wild animals or of the produce of wild animals must expressly or by implication allege that such animals or produce have been reduced into possession (see R v Stride and Millard, supra), and the mere allegation that the animals etc. are the goods and chattels of the prosecutor is not a sufficient allegation of such reduction into possession (R v Stride and Millard, supra, see R v Rough (1779), 2 East, P C 607)

663 All the material allegations in an indictment must be positive and direct and free from duplicity and repugnancy (s). Thus, an indictment must not charge a defendant with one or other of two offences or with acting in one or other of two capacities, and must not be capable of being construed as applying to two different offences without stating which one is charged (t). An indictment must not be double, i.e., no single count must charge the defendant with two or more offences (u). But in respect of one transaction a defendant may be charged with committing several offences, e.g., with uttering a number of forged instruments, if they were all uttered at the same time (v). But the omission to aver

Where a written instrument is the subject-matter of the alleged offence, it is sufficient to describe such instrument by any name or designation by which it may be usually known, or by the purport thereof, without setting out any copy or facsimile or any part thereof (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), ss 5, 7, Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. 98), ss 42, 43). It is sufficient to describe money or a bank note as money, without specifying the particular coin or bank note (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s 18, and see R v West (1856), 1 Dears & B 109, R v Gumble (1872), L R 2 C C R 1). And see as to an indictment for the embezzlement of money, Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s 71, R v Keena (1866), L R 1 C C R 113, and p 650, post.

It seems doubtful whether Arabic figures to express numbers are allowable in an indictment, the older authorities state that numbers must be expressed in words or Roman numerals (see 2 Hale, P C 170, R v Haddock (1717), Andr 137, R v Phelps (1720), 1 Stra 281), but the use of Arabic figures is not now unusual, and is at the most a formal defect which is amendable and of which advantage cannot be taken after plea (see R v Price (1900), 17 T L R 80, R v Edwards (1901), Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed., 82).

(u) The older cases lay down that an indictment must state positively that the defendant did the act or acts which constitute the crime, and that acts must not be stated by way of recital or by implication (2 Hawk P C, c 25, s 60; R v Hutehead (1693), 1 Salk 571, R v Goddard (1703), 3 Salk 171, R v Croughurst (1724), 2 Id Raym 1363, R v Askman (1711), 1 Sess. Cas (x. b.) 159). Facts which are adjuncts of the material facts may be stated by implication (see R v Johnson (1621), 2 Roll Rep 225, R v Boyall (1759), 2 Burr 832, R v Boute (1759), 2 Burr 864, R v Higginson (1760), 2 Burr 1232, R v Somerton (1827), 7 B & C 163, R v Long (1804), 5 Co Rep 120 a, 121 b, R v Lawley (1731), 2 Stra 901, R v Aylett (1785), 1 Term Rep 63, 70, R v Rylund (1867), L R 1 C C R 99). A failure to comply with the rule against statements by way of recital or implication would probably be now considered a mere formal amendable defect of which advantage could not be taken after plea.

In burglary a person may be charged in the same count with breaking and entering a house with intent to commit a felony and with committing the felony, so a person may be charged in the same count with assaulting and also with unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl (R v a matter not necessary to be proved or a defect or mistake in the manner of stating any such matter does not make an indictment bad (a)

SECT. 2.
Form of Indictments.

Use of special words.

664 In indictments for certain crimes the use of certain words is essential, e.g., an indictment for treason must aver that the alleged acts were done "traitorously", for murder, that the defendant "feloniously and of his malice aforethought did kill and murder" etc., for manslaughter, that the defendant "feloniously did kill and slay"; for rape, that the defendant "feloniously did ravish"; for larceny, that the defendant "feloniously did take and carry away", for burglary, that the defendant "feloniously and burglariously did break and enter" etc "with intent to" (commit some named felony), in a statutory forgery, that the defendant "feloniously did forge" etc "with intent to defraud." Every indictment for a felony must aver that the alleged act or acts was or were done feloniously, and if the word "feloniously" is omitted, the indictment, it seems, is bad (b), and every indictment for a misdemeanour must aver that the alleged act or acts was or were done "unlawfully." An indictment for a misdemeanour which contains the word "feloniously" is, it seems, bad (c)

Bowen* (1844), 1 Den. 22) A count charging a defendant with "having used violence to or intimidated" is bad (R. v. Edmunds (1895), 59 J. P. 776) Separate acts of larceny or embezzlement against the same person may, if committed within six months from the first to the last of such acts, be joined together in one count (R. v. Nicholls (1901), 68 J. P. 452, C. C. R.), but the better course is to charge them in different counts (see R. v. Balls (1871), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 328, R. v. Rye (1909), 2 Cr. App. Rep. 155) If one material part of an indictment is repugnant to or inconsistent with another material part the whole is void (R. v. Carter (1800), 2 East, P. O. 985, R. v. Gill (1821), Russ & Ry. 431, R. v. Stevens and Agnew (1804) 5 East, 244, R. v. Craddock (1850), 2 Den. 31)

Chambers* (1896), 18 Cox, C. C. 401) Every fact and circumstance in an indictment which is not a necessary ingredient in the offence charged may be treated as surplusage and need not be proved, and any mistake in stating such matter is immaterial (R. v. Jones (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 611, R. v. Holt (1793), 2 Leach 593, R. v. Radley (1849), 1 Den. 450, Ryalls v. R (1848), 11 Q. B. 781, Ex. Ch., R. v. Godfrey (1858), Dougl. & B. 426, *R. v. R. 225) The words usually inserted at the close of an indictment "against the peace of our sovereign lord the King" or "against the forms of the statute (or statutes) in such case made and provided" are surplusage, and their omission will not make an indictment bad (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 24, Castro v. R (1881), 6 App. Cas. 229) So as to the words "for our sovereign lord the King" at the beginning of an indictment after "The jurors" (R. v. Turner (1839), 2 Mood & R. 211)

SECT. 2.

Indict

If more persons than one join together in the commission of an offence, they may be indicted for it jointly in one indictment or separately in separate indictments (d)

SUB SECT. 2 — Joinder of Offences

Joinder of several defendants Joinder of
offences

665 An indictment may contain one or more counts, and except where one of the counts alleges a previous conviction of the defendant, or where the prosecutor is put to his election on which count he will proceed, the defendant may be arraigned and evidence may be given on all the counts at the same trial, but for the purposes of verdict and judgment each count is to be treated as a separate indictment (e)

Separate treasons and separate misdemeanours
Felony and mis-
demeanour

Separate offences cannot be alleged in one count of an indictment (f), but separate treasons, or separate misdemeanours, may be lawfully charged in separate counts of the same indictment (g)

A count for treason or felony cannot be lawfully joined in the same indictment with a count for misdemeanour (h)

In an indictment for high treason different species of treason may be joined in different counts (i), the same course may be followed in an indictment for treason felony (k)

felonies.

At common law there was no legal objection to several different felonies being charged in different counts of one indictment (a), but it is a well-established rule of practice that, if different felonies, not being different ways of describing the same act, are charged in separate counts of one indictment, the judge will put the prosecutor to his election to proceed and offer evidence on one charge only (b).

Where the same transaction gives rise to several felonies, or where the same act is charged in different counts as constituting different crimes, or where the joinder of different felonies is expressly authorised by statute, the prosecutor will not be put to his election (c)

The joinder of a count for felony with a count for misdemeanour in one indictment makes the indictment bad (d)

SECT. 2.
Form of Indictments.

Several different misdemeanours may be charged in different counts of the same indictment, but if the charges relate to different acts and the joinder of such charges embarrasses the defendant, the prosecutor will be put to his election upon which charge he will proceed (e).

Different misdemeanours should not be charged against different defendants in one indictment, e g, a charge of a conspiracy between two persons should not be joined with a charge of a conspiracy between one of such two persons and a third person (f)

demeanours.

If several counts are joined in one indictment, a verdict should be taken separately on each count, because if there is a general verdict and a general judgment on the whole indictment, and some of the counts should be decided to be bad, the whole judgment is vitiated (g)

Verdict should be taken separately on each

1. R v C C R 172, R v Henwood (1870), 11 Cox, C C 526, U C R See R v Rye (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 150. If a defendant is charged as an accessory before the fact in one count and as accessory after the fact in another count to the same felony, the prosecutor will not be put to his election (R v Blackson (1837) 8 C & P 43, R v Mitchel (1848), 6 State Tr (N s.) 599, 620, 621). A defendant may be charged as principal in the first degree in one count and as principal in the second degree in another count (R v Gray (1835), 7 C & P 164), or as principal in one count and as accessory after the fact to the same felony in another count (Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 94), s 3, R v Tuffin (1903), Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed., 89, where R v Brannon (1880), 14 Cox, C C 394, to the contrary effect, was not followed. See also R v Austin (1837) 7 C & P 796, R v Hartall (1836), 7 C & P 475, R v Wheeler (1835), 7 C & P 170, R v Pulham (1840), 9 C & P 280). A count for feloniously receiving stolen property known to be stolen may be joined with a count for stealing (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 92), and the prosecutor cannot in such a case be put to his election (ibid). But a count for stealing certain property ought not to be joined with a count for stealing the same and other property, and if such counts are joined the prosecutor will be put to his election (R v Hard (1860), 2 F & F 19). As to charging different acts of embezzlement and larceny against the same person in one indictment, see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), ss 5, 6, 71. As to joining different persons as principals and accessories in the same indictment, see pp 257, 258, ante.

(d) The challenges and the incidents of the trial are not the same in felony and misdemeanour, and felony and misdemeanour cannot be tried together (Castro v R (1881), 6 App Cas 229, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p 244). But if an indictment contains a count for felony and a count for misdemeanour, and the prisoner is convicted of either the felony or the misdemeanour and acquitted of the other charge, the conviction is good (R v Ferguson (1855), Dears C C 427, R v Jones (1839), 2 Mood C C 94).

sufficient after verdict if it describes the offence in the words of the statute (h)

If an averment in an indictment for such an offence is imperfectly stated and the jury find a verdict of guilty, and if it appears to the court that the verdict could not have been found without proof of the averment, then the defective averment is cured by verdict (i).

After verdict a defective averment in one count of an indictment may be aided by reference to another count (j)

But the verdict will not cure the total omission of an essential averment (k).

SUB-SECT. 4 — Amendment

Amendment.

667 At common law an indictment could not be amended except by the grand jury that found it (l) Limited powers to amend indictments in cases of misnomer have been conferred by statute (m) on the court which tries the indictment Further powers of amendment have been conferred by statute (n) in case of a variance between any matter in writing or print produced in evidence and the recital or setting forth of such matter in the indictment (o) Further powers of amendment have been conferred by statute (p) as regards any variance between the statement in an indictment for felony or misdemeanour and the evidence offered in proof of the statement in the name of any county or place mentioned in the indictment, in the name or description of any person or persons or body politic or corporate stated to be the owner or owners of any property which is the subject of any offence charged, or to be injured, or intended to be injured, by the commission of such offence, or in the christian name or surname or both the christian name and surname or other description of any person or persons named or described in the indictment; or in the name or description of any matter or thing, or

If there is such variance, and the court which tries the indictment considers that it is not material to the merits of the case and that the defendant cannot be prejudiced in his defence on such merits by an amendment, the court may order the indictment to be amended according to the proof, and the trial is to proceed as if the indictment had originally been in the form in which it is after the amendment has been made (a)

The only court which can exercise the power of amendment is the court that tries the indictment (b)

SECT. 3.—Finding of an Indictment by a Grand Jury.

668 A bill of indictment is generally drawn for the assizes by the clerk of indictments, and for quarter sessions by the clerk of the peace, but in cases of difficulty it is drawn by counsel (c).

Drafting of
indictment.

(a) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), ss 1, 2, 3. The amendment must be made before the case goes to the jury (R v Frost (1855), Dears C C 474, R v Larkin (1864), Dears C C 365, R v Fullarton (1853), 6 Cox, C C 194, R v Rymes (1853), 3 Car & Kir 326). When an amendment has been made, the amendment cannot be amended, and the original indictment cannot be reverted to in its unamended form (R v Barnes (1866), L R 1 C C R 4), R v Pritchard (1861), L & Ca 34). The following are instances where indictments can be amended: R v Wentley (1859), Bell, C C 193 (erroneous and unnecessary statement of time of passing of an Act of Parliament), R v Sturge (1854), 3 F & B 734 (misdescription of one of the termini of a footway), R v Sutton (1877), 13 Cox, C C 648 (misdescription of occupation of field), R v Vincent (1852), 2 Don 464, and R v Marks (1866), 10 Cox, C C 367 (misdescription of ownership of stolen property and see R v Murray, [1906] 2 K B 85, C C R, R v Gumble (1872), L R 2 C C R 1 (misdescription of stolen property), R v Neville (1856), 6 Cox, C C 69 (misdescription of property destroyed), R v Western (1861), L R 1 C C R 122 (misdescription of tribunal before which perjury is alleged to have been committed), R v Tymms (1870), 11 Cox, C C 615 (amendment of description of summons on the hearing of which perjury was alleged to have been committed), R v Helton (1862), 9 Cox, C C 297 (failure to prove alleged name of child murdered), R v Byers (1907), 71 J P 205 (misdescription in name of child in respect of whose funeral a false pretence was alleged to have been made). See R v Winch (1855), 6 Cox, C C 523, R v Smith (1858), 1 F & F 36, R v Dukinfield (Inhabitants) (1863), 4 B & S 158. But an amendment will not be made when the effect of the amendment would be to alter the nature or quality of the crime charged, or to substitute a charge of one offence for another (R v Benson, [1908] 2 K B 270, C C R), or to alter a felony into a misdemeanour (R v Wright (1860), 2 F & F 320), or a misdemeanour into a felony (R v Shatt (1851), 3 Car & Kir 206), or to substitute a different allegation of false pretences from that set out in the indictment (R v Basley (1852), 6 Cox, C C 29), or to add an essential averment, e.g., "with intent to defraud," the omission of which makes the indictment bad (R v James (1871), 12 Cox, C C 127), see, too, R v Lallement (1853), 6 Cox, C C 204, R v Davison (1850), 7 Cox, C C 138, R v Garnham (1861), 8 Cox, C C 451, R v Robinson (1864), 4 F. & F. 43. 669 A bill of indictment does not become an indictment till it has been presented to and found by a grand jury. The bill must be found by at least twelve grand jurors, and the practice is to call twenty-three (e). They are called and sworn immediately after the opening of the court (f), and the presiding judge charges them as to the bills of indictment which are to be laid before them, in most cases these bills relate to charges into which the examining justices have already inquired and with respect to which depositions have been taken. The presiding judge advises the grand jury whether the evidence in reference to any particular bill as disclosed in those depositions is sufficient to constitute a prima facie case against the accused, and advises them, if it does, to return a true bill, and, if it does not, to throw out the bill.

Consideration of bills
Evidence

670 The grand jury, having been charged, retire to a private room, and the bills are laid before them (g)

The witnesses in support of each bill are sworn by the foreman or any other member of the grand jury acting on his behalf.

As each witness is sworn and examined, the foreman writes his initials against the name of such witness indorsed on the bill (h)

(d) An indictment must be in English. As to the form of indictments, see p 344, ante.

(e) 2 Hale, P O 161, R v Clyncard (1599), 2 Cro Eliz. 654. There cannot be more than twenty-three (2 Burr 1088, R v Marsh (1837), 6 Ad & El 236, 241). As to the qualification etc of grand jurors, see title JURORS.

(f) As to objections to a grand juror, see 2 Hale, P C 155, 2 Hawk P C, c 25, s 16, R v Lewis (1679), 7 State Tr 250, R v Sheares (1798), 27 State Tr 255, 267, R v Jackson (1795), 25 State Tr 783, 887.

(g) Neither counsel nor solicitor for the prosecution is admitted to the room. At the Central Criminal Court no person, other than the witnesses, is allowed to enter the grand jury rooms, except by written order of the clerk of the court or his deputy (Rules, December 12, 1892, r 6). The practice was formerly different, see Trials of the Regicides (1660), 5 State Tr 972, R v Shottesbury (Earl) (1681), 8 State Tr 771, and Grand Jurors Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict c 54, s 2).

(h) Grand Jurors Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c 54), ss 2, 3, R v Dickinson (1819), Russ & Ry 401. The provisions as to indorsing and initialling the names of the witnesses are, it seems, only directory (O'Connell v R (1844), 11 Ul & Fin 155, 405, H L). An improper mode of swearing the witnesses before a grand jury will not vitiate the indictment (R v Russell (1842), Car & M 247, R v Bullard (1872), 12 Cox, C C 353, O'Connell v R, supra). A grand jury may present an indictment on their own knowledge and without any evidence (R v Russell, supra, R v Bullard, supra). If a witness who has been examined before the examining justices is dead or ill, his deposition may be read before the grand jury without proof of the facts evidence of which is required by the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 17 (R v Clements (1851), 2 Den 251, R v Bullard (1872), 12 Cox, C C 353, R v Gerrans (1876), 13 Cox, C C 158; R v Lynch (1902), Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed., 100). Some judges, however, have required such evidence to be given before a deposition can be read before the grand jury (R v Philips (1858), 1 F & F 105, R v Wilson (1874), 12 Cox, C C 622, R v Beaver (1866), 16 Cox, C C 274, compare R v Rendle (1861), 11 Cox, C C 209). The

671 If a majority of the jury, consisting of twelve at least, think that there is "probable evidence" in support of the offence charged in a bill, the words "True bill" are indorsed on the indictment, which is then said to be "found" If they think there is not such evidence, the words "No true bill" are to be indorsed on the indictment, which is then said to be "ignored" In each case the foreman should write his signature on the back of the bill (k)

When one or more bills have been so indorsed, the foreman, accompanied by some of the grand jurors, returns into court with the bills that have been found or ignored and delivers them to the clerk of the court (l)

The clerk of the court, addressing the grand jury, then says, "Gentlemen of the grand jury, you find a true bill" (or "no true bill") against — for (the offence charged, e.g. murder, larceny etc., or, if it is a misdemeanour, "for a misdemeanour") (m)

If any more bills remain to be considered, the grand jury return to their room and proceed with the consideration of the other bills and present them in the manner above described, either singly or in batches

672 When all the bills have been dealt with, the grand jury either make some presentment on some matter of public concern, or present that they "find nothing presentable except that which they have before presented", thereupon the presiding judge discharges them from further attendance, and after this no more bills can be found at that session of the court (n)

grand jury cannot hear witnesses for the defence, and neither the defendant nor the wife or husband of the defendant can give evidence before them under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36) (R v Rhodes, [1899] 1 Q. B. 77, O. O. R.) A witness who gives false evidence before a grand jury is indictable for perjury. Evidence to prove such perjury must be given by persons present at the time, e.g. other witnesses (R v Hughes (1841), 1 Car. & Kir. 519), but not by any of the grand jurors, as they cannot give evidence of what passes in the grand jury room (R v Hughes, supra, R v Marsh (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 236, 237). but see 1 Chitty, Criminal Law, 317

(m) A bill which has been thrown out may be again preferred to the same grand jury during the same assizes or sessions (R v Simmonite (1843), 1 Cox, O. C. 30, R v Newton (1843), 2 Mood & R. 503), but see R v Humphreys (1842), Car. & M. 601, R v Austin (1850), 4 Cox, O. C. 385. In practice a bill is only preferred again to the same grand jury by the direction of the judge. A fresh bill may be preferred at the next assizes or sessions, unless a time limit prevents (see R v Kilmister (1835), 7 C. & P. 228). If a bill is ignored the defendant may, if he is in custody, be detained until the grand jury are discharged, and then, if no fresh bill has been found against him, he is entitled to be discharged (R v Simmonite, supra)

(n) But the grand jury, though formally discharged, may, if they have neither left the precincts of the court nor separated, be recalled and charged with other bills (R v Holloway (1839), 9 C. & P. 43)

SECT. 4.—Certiorari.

SECT. 4.

Certiorari.

676 An indictment or presentment found by any court may be removed into the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice by a writ of certiorari issuing out of that court. The object of the removal is to obtain a trial at bar or before the justices of assize or at the sittings of the High Court of Justice in London or Middlesex or to quash the indictment or presentment (1)

Removal of indictment
by certiorari.

The writ of certiorari is demandable as of right by the Attorney-General acting on behalf of the Crown (1), and it seems that it is demandable as of right in the case of an indictment against a body corporate which is not authorised to appear by solicitor in the court in which the indictment is preferred (1). In other cases an indictment will not be removed into the King's Bench Division for trial, either at the instance of the prosecutor or of the defendant, unless the party applying for the removal shows to the satisfaction of the court that a fair and impartial trial of the case cannot be had in the court below, or that some question of law of more than usual difficulty and importance is likely to arise upon the trial, or that a special jury or a view of the premises in respect whereof any indictment is preferred may be required for a satisfactory trial of the case in a county other than that in which the indictment is preferred (2).

granted.

An indictment may also be removed by certiorari into the Central Criminal Court (2).

677 On an order for the issue of the writ of certiorari being made, and on the necessary recognisance being entered into and lodged with the clerk of the peace or clerk of assize who has custody of the indictment, all proceedings upon the indictment in the court below are stayed (3). A return is then made to the writ by indorsing on the writ a memorandum signed and sealed by one of the persons to whom the writ is addressed and by returning the writ to the Crown Office with the indictment and other documents ordered to be returned (3).

writ

Return.

If an indictment has been removed by certiorari before trial into the King's Bench Division and remains there, it is usually tried at the assizes or in the King's Bench Division in the same way as a civil action, but an order may be made by the King's Bench

Change of venue

Division, or in vacation by a judge in chambers, that the trial shall take place at the Central Criminal Court (q).

678 The removal of an indictment by certiorari into the King's Bench Division does not change the venue, and unless an order is made changing the venue, or unless the Attorney-General, prosecuting on behalf of the Crown, demands a trial at bar, the indictment will be tried at the civil side of the assizes for the county where the indictment was found (r). If an indictment is removed from the Central Criminal Court to the King's Bench Division, the writ of certiorari must specify the county or jurisdiction in which the indictment is to be tried, and a jury must be summoned and the trial must proceed in the same manner as if the indictment had originally been found in that county or jurisdiction (s).

Application for change of venue.

In other cases where an indictment has been removed by certiorari, an application to change the venue must be made to the divisional court of the King's Bench Division during the sittings or in vacation to a judge in chambers (a).

Trial at bar

679 If an indictment has been removed by certiorari into the King's Bench Division, the Attorney-General, if prosecuting on behalf of the Crown, has the right to demand a trial at bar, that is, a trial before at least three judges of that division (b). A trial for treason committed abroad under 35 Hen 8, c 2, s 1, is tried at bar without any application by the Attorney-General (c).

(a) See title CROWN PRACTICE. The court has power to change the venue both in felony and in misdemeanour, but only exercises it in two cases—(1) where it is shown that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county or other jurisdiction where the venue is laid (see R v Boughton, [1895] 2 I R 386, R v Barrett (1870), 41 R C L 285, R v Fay (1872), 6 I R C L 436, R v Patent Fertiliser and Sanitary Manure Co., Ltd (1865), 13 L T 367, R v Dunn (1847), 11 Jur. 287, R v Holden (1833), 5 B & Ad 347, R v Hunt (1820) 3 B & Ad 444, R v Penprase (1833), 4 B & Ad 573, R v Faulk (1726), 2 Ld Raym 1452), (2) when it appears necessary that the jury should have a view of premises situate in a different county from that in which the indictment is preferred (R v Sheldon (1876), 32 L T 27, R v Gyde (1908), 72 J P 504), see Short and Mellor, Practice of the Crown Office, 2nd ed, 106—107.

indictment for the offence, the defendant may be arrested on a warrant issued by any justice or justices of the county or place in which the offence is alleged to have been committed or in which the person indicted resides or is, or is supposed or suspected to be. On the person being brought before the justice or justices of the place where the warrant was issued the justices, on proof that he is the person named in the indictment, may, without further inquiry or examination commit him for trial or admit him to bail (Indictable Offences Act, 1818 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), s 3). In indictments for the non repair or obstruction of highways, bridges etc the defendants are generally allowed to appear by attorney. In such a case they do not take their places in the dock to plead orally, but plead in writing (see Archbold, Criminal Pleading 23rd ed., 179)

(k) See R v Derryhouse (1847), 2 Cox, C C 446. If a prisoner has been committed for trial and it appears to any two members of the visiting committee of the prison in which the prisoner is awaiting his trial that he is insane, they are to call to their assistance two legally qualified medical practitioners, and such members of the committee and practitioners are to examine the prisoner and inquire into his sanity, and after such examination and inquiry may certify in writing that he is insane, on a prisoner being so certified to be insane a Secretary of State may remove such prisoner to a lunatic asylum and order him to be detained there, until he is remitted to prison or discharged (Criminal Lunatics Act 1881 (47 & 48 Vict c 61), s 2 (1), (3), and see s 16, definition of "prisoner")

(l) Formerly counsel were not allowed to appear for defendants on a charge of felony except to argue points of law for them, but the law was altered as to treason by the Treason Act, 1695 (7 & 8 Will 3, c 3), s 1, and as to felony by the Trials for Felony Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 114), s 1. SUB SECT 2—*Arraignment.*SECT. 1.
Proceedings before Plea.

Arraignment.

685. If the defendant appears in the dock, he is called upon by name and told to hold up his hand (p), and he is then arraigned by the officer of the court. The arraignment consists of reading over the indictment, or the material parts or an abstract of it, and asking the accused whether he is guilty or not guilty (q).

686 If the defendant on being arraigned stands mute and does not answer, the court directs a jury to be impanelled from the panel or any persons present and sworn to try the issue whether he is mute of malice or by the visitation of God (r).

Defendant
standing mute.

If the defendant has counsel, his counsel may address the jury and call witnesses to prove that he is mute by the visitation of God (s).

If the jury find that the defendant is mute of malice, the court may order the proper officer to enter a plea of not guilty on the defendant's behalf, and the plea so entered will have the same effect as if he had actually pleaded it (a).

If the jury find that the defendant is mute by the visitation of God, the jury may be resworn to try if he is fit to plead, if the defendant can communicate by signs, and there is anyone who can interpret the signs to the court, or if the defendant can read and write, the jury should be directed to find that he is able to plead, and the defendant can then be arraigned and can answer by signs or by means of writing (b).

under the Act, 13th May, 1904, Statutory Rules and Orders, 1904, p 123. A defendant may also obtain permission to defend in forma pauperis and, if he obtains such permission, may have counsel assigned to him (1 Chitty, Criminal Law, 412), but this course is rarely adopted.

(p) The holding up the hand is a mere ceremony to show the court who the prisoner is (see Lilburne's Trial (1649), 4 State Tr 1270, at p 1289, Stafford's (Lord) Trial (1680), 7 State Tr 1294, 1555).

(q) If an indictment contains a count which alleges merely a previous conviction, the defendant is not to be arraigned on that count until after he has pleaded guilty or has been convicted, if he is arraigned on such a count without having pleaded guilty or having been convicted and is afterwards tried without a fresh arraignment and is convicted, the conviction is bad (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 116, Faulkner v R, [1905] 2 K B 76).

Yecuado* (1814), 6 Cox, C C 386). A plea of not guilty may be entered under the Criminal Law Act, 1827, if a defendant refuses to plead on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction (R. v. Bernard (1838), 1 F & F 240), or on the ground that he has already pleaded to an indictment for the same offence and has been tried before a court that had no jurisdiction to try the offence (R. v. Bitton (1833), 6 C & P. 92).

Trial of issue
is sane or not

687 If the jury find that the defendant is not able to plead, the jury are again resworn to try whether he is sane or not, and they should be directed that, if they are satisfied that the defendant from the defect of his faculties has not intelligence enough to understand the nature of the proceedings against him, they ought to find him not sane. If the jury find that the defendant is not sane, then the judge may order him to be detained during the King's pleasure (c).

If they find that he is sane, and the charge is one of misdemeanour, his counsel may plead not guilty for him and the trial can proceed, but if the charge is one of felony, the proper course would seem to be to adjourn the trial, so that the prisoner may be instructed how to plead by signs (d).

Procedure
insane

688 If a person indicted for an offence appears insane, the court may on his arraignment order a jury to be impanelled to try whether he is sane, and, if the jury find that he is then insane, the court may order the finding to be recorded and the person to be kept in custody during the King's pleasure (e).

Motion to quash
indictment

689 A motion to quash an indictment for a formal defect must be made before the jury are sworn, and should properly be made before plea pleaded (f).

A motion to quash an indictment because of a substantial defect which cannot be amended (g) may be made at any time before verdict, but the proper time to make the motion is before plea pleaded (h).

The proper procedure does not seem to have been followed in this case, and it cannot be regarded as an authority (see R v Pritchard and R v Berry, supra). In R v Stafford Prison (Governor), [1909] 2 K B 81, a prisoner who was found by the jury to be mute by the visitation of God was also found to be incapable of pleading and taking his trial upon the indictment and of understanding and following the proceedings by reason of his inability to communicate with and be communicated with by others, it was held that this amounted to a finding that he was insane within the meaning of the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1800 (39 & 40 Geo 3, c 94), s 2.

Where a jury is so impanelled, the onus is on the prosecution to prove the sanity of the defendant (R v Davies (1853), 3 Car & Kir 328). The jury may form their own judgment of the defendant's sanity or insanity by his demeanour without any evidence being given, if he shows strong symptoms of insanity, it is unnecessary to ask him if he wishes to cross-examine any witnesses who are called or to make any remarks or offer evidence (R v Goode (1837), 7 Ad & El 536).

SECT 2—Pleas.

SUB-SECT 1—Special Pleas

691 A defendant may plead the following special pleas a plea to the jurisdiction, a plea of pardon, a plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit

may plead.

A defendant may also plead the general plea of guilty or not guilty, to an indictment for libel a defendant besides pleading not guilty may plead a special plea that the matter charged as libellous is true, and that its publication was for the public benefit (k), to an indictment against a parish for non-repair of a highway the inhabitants besides pleading not guilty may plead the special plea that some other person or persons are bound to repair ratum tenuræ (l). Special pleas must be in writing

A plea to the jurisdiction raises an objection to the jurisdiction of the court (m). It is more usual, however, for the defendant to take advantage of the want of jurisdiction of the court under the general issue (n).

Plea to the
jurisdiction

A pardon other than a pardon under statute must be specially pleaded, and a person who has received a pardon and pleads the general issue will be taken to have waived his plea (o).

Pardon.

2 Q B 425. When the indictment is for some great crime, such as treason or felony, the court will only quash the indictment "upon the plainest ground," and will leave the defendant to his remedy by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment (R v Lynch, [1903] 1 K B 446, at p 449, R v Sheares (1798), 27 State Tr 255, at p 266). So also if the indictment is for a crime of a public nature, as a nuisance to a highway, perjury, sedition (2 Hawk P O, c 25, s 148), a cheat, or an offence founded on fraud or oppression (see 2 East, P O 818 n, R v Wadsworth (1694), 5 Mod Rep 13, R v Orbell (1703), 6 Mod Rep 42, see, too, R v Bailey (1743), 2 Stra 1211, R v King (1747), 2 Stra 1268).

BOOK 2

Pleas

Autrefois convict or acquitt

692 The plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit avers that the defendant has been previously convicted or acquitted on a charge for the same offence as that in respect of which he is arraigned (p).

If the defendant pleads autrefois convict or autrefois acquit, the prosecution replies or demurs. If the prosecution replies, which is the usual course, a jury is sworn to try the issue (q).

The onus of proving the plea is on the defendant, he may prove it by producing a certified copy of the record or proceedings of the alleged previous conviction or acquittal (r), and showing by such copy or by other evidence, if necessary, that he has been convicted or acquitted of the offence on which he has been arraigned or that he might on his former trial have been convicted of the offence on which he has been arraigned (s), or that his previous conviction or acquittal is by statute a bar to subsequent proceedings for the same cause (t).

The question for the jury on the issue is whether the defendant has previously been in jeopardy in respect of the charge on which he is arraigned, for the rule of law is that a person must not be put in peril twice for the same offence.

The defendant can only succeed on such a plea if the charge to which he pleads is one in respect of which he could have been legally convicted on the prior occasion or is one in respect of which, by statute, previous proceedings for the same cause are a bar to subsequent proceedings (a).

(p) The pleas of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit may be pleaded orally, but must be afterwards reduced to writing. For an instance of a plea of autrefois acquit, see R v Sheen (1827), 2 O & P 634, at p 635, and 4 Chitty, Criminal Law, 528. The court, if necessary, will assign counsel to the defendant to draw the plea in a proper form (R v Chamberlain (1833) 6 C & P 93). It is sufficient for the defendant to plead that he has been lawfully convicted or acquitted, as the case may be, of the offence charged in the indictment (Criminal Procedure Act, 1857 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 28).

(r) Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 99, s 13), R v Bird (1851), 2 Den 94.

(t) See Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 45.

(a) In order to succeed on such a plea the defendant must prove that judgment of conviction or acquittal has been given (1 Starkie, Criminal Pleading, 2nd ed., 319). A judgment of conviction that has been reversed as erroneous in law is no bar to a subsequent indictment (R v Drury (1849), 3 Car & Kir 196). If a judgment of conviction has been reversed on the facts under the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 4, it seems, although it is not clear, that such a reversal would support a plea of autrefois acquit. A discharge of a jury without a verdict being given is no bar to a subsequent indictment (R v Charlworth (1861), 1 B & S 460). A summary conviction before justices for an assault is a bar to a subsequent indictment in respect of the same transaction for wounding etc with intent to maim or to do grievous bodily harm (R v Walker (1843), 2 Mood & R 446. Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 45). But if the person assaulted dies after the conviction, the summary conviction is no bar to an indictment for murder or manslaughter (R v Morris (1867), L. R. 1 O O R 90, R v Friel (1890), 17 Cox, C O 326). An acquittal on an indictment for murder is a bar to an indictment for manslaughter in respect of the same transaction, so also an acquittal for manslaughter is a bar to an indictment for murder in respect of the same transaction (Holtcroft's Case, cited 4 Co Rep 46 b, 2 Hale, P C 246, Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, Vol I, 42, R v Tancock (1876), 13 Cox, C C 217). An acquittal on an indictment for murder (and, it seems, also for manslaughter) is a bar to a subsequent indictment for an assault, if there is only one act alleged in the first indictment, but if there are several distinct and independent assaults, and some or any of them did not in any way conduce to the death of the person killed, then an acquittal on an indictment for murder, although all these assaults were included in the indictment, is no bar to an indictment for the distinct and independent assaults which did not conduce to the death (R v Bird (1851), 2 Den 94). An acquittal on a charge of felony under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 100), s 32, for throwing wood upon a railway with intent to endanger the safety of persons travelling or being on the railway is not a bar to an indictment on the same facts under s 34 of the same Act for the misdemeanour of unlawfully endangering the safety of any such person by an unlawful act, or to an indictment under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 97), s 36, for the misdemeanour of unlawfully obstructing an engine etc on a railway by an unlawful act (R v Gilmore (1882), 15 Cox, C C 85). An acquittal on an indictment for rape is not a bar to an indictment for a common assault, although the transaction is the same (R v Dungey (1864), 4 F & F 99). An acquittal on an indictment for rape would be a bar to an indictment for attempt to ravish or for an indecent assault (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c 69), s 9). An acquittal on an indictment for an indecent assault is a bar to an indictment for a common assault (R v Bostock (1895), 17 Cox, C C 700). An acquittal on an indictment for false pretences is a bar to an indictment for larceny on the same facts (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96) s 88), but an acquittal on an indictment for larceny is not a bar to an indictment for false pretences (see R v Henderson (1841), Car & M 328, where the point was raised, but it became unnecessary to decide it). An acquittal on an indictment for breaking and entering a dwelling-house and stealing there is not a bar to an indictment on the same facts for breaking and entering a dwelling-house with intent to steal (R v Vandercomb (1796), 2 Leach, 708). An acquittal on an indictment charging the defendant with stealing goods alleged to be the property of one person is not a bar to an indictment charging him with stealing the same goods alleged to be the property of another person, although the erroneous allegations in the first indictment might have been amended (R v Green (1856), Dears & B 113). An acquittal on an indictment charging larceny at common law and the felonious receiving of goods, when the ground of the acquittal was that the goods were fixtures, is no bar to a subsequent indictment under the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s 31, for stealing fixtures (R v O'Brien (1862), 15 Cox, C C 29, C C R). An acquittal on an indictment against a bankrupt for omitting to disclose part of his property (Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c 62), s 11) is not a bar to a subsequent indictment for omitting to disclose the same property and also other property, although such a subsequent indictment ought not, except in very peculiar circumstances, to be preferred, and the judge in such a case would in the absence of peculiar circumstances, advise the jury to acquit (R v Champneys (1837), 2 Mood & R 26). An acquittal before a court that had no jurisdiction to try the offence charged is not a bar to a subsequent indictment before a court that has jurisdiction (2 Hawk P. C., c 35, ss 3, 4, see R v Bitton (1833), 6 O & P 92). An acquittal before a court of competent jurisdiction in a foreign country is a bar to a subsequent indictment here (R v Roche (1775), 1 Leach, 131, R v Hutchinson (1677), 3 Keb 785, see Beak v Thyriohut (1688), 3 Mol Rep 194, Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, Vol I, 52, n), as to a copy of the record in such a case, see Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), s 7. The dismissal of a charge "without prejudice" is a bar to subsequent proceedings for the same offence (Great Southern and Western Rail Co v Godding, [1908] 21 R. 429).

PLEA.

If the jury find in favour of the defendant on the issue raised by a plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit, he must be discharged unless there is another indictment against him.

Pleas.

over

If the jury find against the defendant and the charge is one of felony, he is allowed to "plead over," that is, to plead not guilty. In misdemeanours he cannot, strictly speaking, plead over, but the court may allow him to withdraw his special plea and plead not guilty (b).

SUB-SECT 2—*The General Issue*Pleading generally

693. If no special plea has been pleaded, or if a special plea has been pleaded and the issue on it has been decided against the defendant and he has been allowed to plead over, the defendant is called upon to plead generally to the indictment. He can plead either guilty or not guilty.

Plea of not guilty

By a plea of not guilty the defendant, if he has no privilege of peerage, thereby "puts himself upon the country" for trial, and the court must thereupon order a jury to be called in the usual manner for the trial of the defendant (c).

Application
for postponement of trial

694 After plea pleaded, and before the jury are called, an application may be made for the postponement of the trial (d). Such a postponement may be ordered on an application made at the instance of either the prosecution or the defendant (e).

(b) See R v Gismore (1832), 15 Cqx, C C 86, 88.

(c) Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4 c 2b), s 1.

(d) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 27.

(e) The application should be supported by an affidavit (R v Savage (1843), 1 Car & Kir 75, R v Macarthy (1842), Car & M 625, R v Palmer (1834), 6 C & P 652). The grounds on which postponement has been granted are—the absence or illness of a material witness as to the facts (R v Hunter (1829), 3 C & P 591, R v Bowen (1840), 9 C & P 509, R v Savage (1843), 1 Car & Kir 75, R v Macarthy (1842), Car & M 625, R v Palmer (1834), 6 C & P 652, R v Beartmore (1837), 7 C & P 497, R v Parish (1837), 7 C & P 782, R v Lawrence (1866), 4 F & F 901), or the existence of great excitement on the subject of the trial in the neighbourhood of the place of trial (R v Bolam (1839), 2 Mood & R 192, R v Jolliffe (1791), 4 Term Rep 285), the absence of a witness as to character merely is no ground for postponing the trial (see R v Jones (1806), 8 East, 31, at p 34). Postponement will not be granted to enable the defence to make inquiries as to the evidence of fresh witnesses for the prosecution who were not called before the committing justices (R v Johnson (1847), 2 Car & Kir 354). Formerly, where a material witness was a child who was incapable of understanding the nature of an oath, a trial was sometimes postponed to give opportunities for the instruction of the witness (see R v White (1786), 1 Leach, 430, R v Wade (1825), 1 Mood C C 86, R v Williams (1835), 7 C & P 320, R v Milton (1841), 11 Car Cas 16, R v Nicholas (1846), 2 Car & Kir 246), but the provisions of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 30, have probably now made such postponement in many cases unnecessary. The prisoner may at the discretion of the court, if the trial is postponed, be detained in custody or be admitted to bail or discharged on his own recognisances (R v Beardmore (1836), 7 C & P 497, R v Parish (1837), 7 C & P 782, R v Osborn (1837), 7 C & P 799, R v Crowe (1829), 4 C & P 251). If a defendant is indicted at the assizes next following his commitment, and the trial is postponed because of the illness of a material witness, the trial may be again postponed at the next assizes on a similar ground, in spite of the provisions of the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car 2, c 2), s 6 (R v Bowen (1840), 9 C & P 509). It is not usual to order the defendant to pay the costs of the prosecution on a postponement, if the application is by the defendant, or to order the prosecution to pay the defendant's costs, if the application is by the prosecution (R v Hunter (1829) 3 C & P 591, R v Crowe (1829), 4 C & P 251).

SECT. 3.—*The Petty Jury*SUB-SECT. 1.—Calling the Jury.

SECT. 3.

The Petty Jury

Petty jury

695. After the defendant has pleaded not guilty, if the parties are ready to proceed with the trial, the next step in the proceedings is to call a petty jury (f)

The sheriff receives a precept from the clerk of the peace in the case of quarter sessions, or from the justices of assize in the case of assizes, to summon to the court a sufficient number of duly qualified jurors (g)

How summoned

It is his duty to summon the jurors and to return their names, with their addresses and occupations, on the panel or piece of parchment which he delivers to the clerk of the court (h)

The panel

The usual course is for the clerk of the court first to call over all the names of the jurors in the panel, when those who do not answer to their names are liable to be fined by the court

Calling the panel over

The clerk of the court then calls the names of twelve jurors who have answered to their names, and summons them to take their places in the jury box (i)

Choosing the jury

A jury is not properly constituted until all the twelve persons serving on it are sworn or have taken an affirmation to try the issue raised by the defendant's plea of not guilty.

Swearing the jury.

SUB SECT. 2 — Challenges

696. On the trial of an indictment for felony, before the jurors are sworn, the defendant and the Crown must be allowed the opportunity of challenging (i e, objecting to) the jurors who are called to serve Challenges.

697 Challenges to jurors are of two kinds, challenges to the array (i e, to the whole number of jurors in the panel) and challenges to the polls (i e, to individual jurors)

A challenge to the array must be before any juror is sworn, &

(f) A petty jury is one that tries the issues of fact in criminal cases, as opposed to a grand jury, which finds the indictments.

(g) See Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo 4, c 50), s 20, and title JURIES. A special jury cannot be had in a case of felony. In a case of misdemeanour a special jury may be obtained, when the record is in the King's Bench Division (see ibid, s 30, Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 77), s 17) Persons qualified to serve as special jurors are liable to serve on petty juries in criminal cases

(h) A printed panel of the jurors summoned to the assizes is to be made seven days before the commission day, and to be kept in the office for inspection, a printed copy of the panel is to be delivered to any party requiring the same on the payment of 1s (Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict c 76), s. 106). Persons accused of treason are entitled to have a copy of the panel delivered to them two days at the least before their trial, see Treason Act, 1695 (7 & 8 Will. 3, c 3), s 7. As to amendment of the panel by the judge, see R v Phillips (1868), 11 Cox, C C 142

(i) It is not necessary that the names should be called in the order in which they stand in the panel (Mansell v R (1857), Dears & B 375) If the clerk of the court calls into the jury box A B, whose name is in the panel, and Y Z, whose name is also in the panel, goes into the jury box and is sworn in the name of A. B and sits with the other jurors at the trial of a prisoner, and the prisoner is convicted, the mistake is not a ground for quashing the conviction (R v Mellor (1858), Dears & B 468)

SECT. 3

The Petty Jury*Challenge to the array challenge to the polls before the individual juror who is challenged is sworn (k)

698 A challenge to the array is allowed "for favour," i.e., on the ground of any partiality in the sheriff, under-sheriff, or other officer concerned in the summoning and return of the jury, as, for instance, if such officer is the prosecutor or is related to either party, or if any dispute is pending between such officer and either party, or if such officer has been concerned as counsel or solicitor or in some such capacity for either party in the same matter (l)

A challenge to the array must be in writing and must state particularly the cause of challenge, and the other party may plead or demur to the challenge (m)

When the challenge is pleaded to, the court appoints two impartial persons, called "triers," to try the cause of challenge (n).

If the triers decide in favour of the challenge, the array is quashed against the sheriff or other officer who has returned it, and the coroner is ordered immediately to return a fresh panel.

If there is a challenge to the array returned by the coroner, and the array is quashed, the court appoints two persons, called "electors" (i.e., electors), to return a fresh panel, to this array no challenge is allowed (o)

Challenges to the polls

699 Challenges to the polls are either peremptory or for cause. Peremptory challenges, for which no cause need be shown, are allowed to the defendant to the number of thirty-five in treason (p) and twenty in felony (q). A defendant on a charge of misdemeanour has no peremptory challenge.

(k) See also title JURILS. Neither challenges to the array nor challenges to the polls can be taken until a full jury has appeared (R v Edmonds (1821), 4 B & Ald 471, at p 473). The challenge to the polls must be before the juror "comes to the book to be sworn" and before he is sworn, i.e., before a juryman takes the book in his hand at the direction of the court, or, it seems, if he affirms or takes the oath in the Scotch form, or in any other form except the usual one, before the clerk of the court begins to read over the form of affirmation etc (see R v Frost (1839), 9 C & P 129, at p 137, R v Braundeth (1817), 32 State Tr 755, at 770, R v Giorgetti (1862), 4 F & F 546). If a juror is unchallenged and is sworn, an objection cannot afterwards be taken to him on the ground of partiality (R v Wardle (1842), Car & M 617). After verdict the objection cannot be taken that one of the jurors sworn was not returned as a juror (Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 64), s 21, see R v Metcalfe (1848), 3 Cox, C C 220, R v Phillips (1868), 11 Cox, C C 142). Quære whether the last-mentioned Act meets the case of a person who is not competent to serve on a jury acting as a juryman. In R v Tremearne (1826), 5 B & C 254, decided before the passing of the Act, this was held to be a mis-trial. In R v Rothwell (1895), cited in Ex parte Morris (1907), 72 J P 5, a rule nisi for a certiorari to quash an indictment because a juror was under age was discharged on the ground that the objection ought to have been taken at the time of the trial.

SECT. 2.
The Petty
Jury

The Crown has no peremptory challenge in any case, but may challenge as the names are called over, and is not bound to show the cause of challenge until the panel is gone through, a defendant on a charge of misdemeanour or a defendant on a charge of felony whose peremptory challenges have been exhausted may follow the same course (r).

700 When a juror has been challenged for cause, the court appoints twelve to try the challenge (a). Challenge for cause

The causes for challenge are that the juror called is an alien or a minor or not qualified to serve as a juror (b), or has some personal defect which renders him incapable of discharging the duty of a jurymen, or that he is not impartial (c), or that he has served on the coroner's jury or on the grand jury in respect of the same matter (d).

If the cause for challenge is allowed, the juror is ordered to stand aside and a fresh juror is called (e).

701 If several prisoners are indicted together, they may join in their challenges and may be tried together, unless the judge thinks fit that they should be tried separately (f). If they sever in their challenges, each prisoner has a separate right of challenging peremptorily and for cause (g). Challenges by co-defendants.

SECT. 3

The Petty Jury

Juror objecting to serve

Administering oaths or affirmation to jury

Giving the prisoner in charge to the jury

Admission of the public

702 An unqualified juror, although he is not challenged by either party, may object to serve, and, if the court finds that he is not qualified, he will be ordered to stand aside (h).

SUB SECT 3—Swearing the Jury

703 When a full jury of twelve men who have not been challenged, or in respect of whom there is no cause for challenge, have been called, the next step is to swear them (i). The oath or affirmation is administered by any officer of the court deputed for that purpose (k).

704 The clerk of the court, if the charge is one of felony, then states the effect of the indictment, or that part of it on which the defendant has been arraigned, to the jury, and gives the prisoner in charge to them. In misdemeanours, as the defendant is entitled to a copy of the indictment, it is not necessary to state its effect, and he is not given in charge to the jury (l).

At the assizes, but not at quarter sessions, a proclamation is made at this stage inviting anyone who can inform the court of any crimes committed by the prisoner at the bar to come forward (m).

SECT 4—The Hearing.

705 As a general rule all persons have a right to be present in court, provided there is sufficient accommodation and there is no disturbance of the proceedings. It is usual, where cases involving indigent details are called on, to direct females and boys to leave the court, but if an adult woman should insist on being present at the hearing of a case, there is probably no power to prevent her being present. It is expressly provided by statute (n) that, when a person who in the opinion of the court is under sixteen is called as a witness in any proceedings in relation to an offence against or see R v Fisher (1848), 3 Cox, C C 68, where PLATT, B, said it was an "ill practice to allow the challenges to be severed" for the purpose of giving each prisoner a separate trial. If two or more persons are jointly indicted, each may apply to be tried separately, and such an application should be granted if the applicant is likely to be prejudiced by a joint trial (R v Dibble (1908), 1 Cr App R 155).

(h) R v Grey (1682), 9 State Tr 127, R v Cook (1696), 13 State Tr 311, 313, 318. A juror who has been called to serve on a trial for murder, and who states that he has conscientious objections to capital punishment, may be ordered to stand by (Mansell v R (1857), Dears & B 375).

(i) A juror who objects to be sworn may affirm (Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 48), s 1).

(k) It is the practice on a charge of felony to swear each juror separately, and on a charge of misdemeanour to swear four at a time. In felony the form of oath is, "You shall well and truly try and true deliverance make between our sovereign lord the King and the prisoner at the bar, whom you shall have in charge and true verdict give according to the evidence, so help you God" (1 Chitty, Criminal Law, 551, see R v Dowlan (1793), 5 Term Rep 311, 313). In misdemeanours the form is, "You shall well and truly try the issue joined between our sovereign lord the King and the defendant, and true verdict give" etc. (Dickinson, Quarter Sessions, 5th ed., 508).

(m) For the form of the proclamation, see 1 Chitty, Criminal Law, 553.

any conduct contrary to decency or morality, the court may order the exclusion of all persons not being members or officers of the court or parties, their counsel or solicitors, and the bona fide representatives of a newspaper or news agency. No child (i.e., anyone under fourteen) other than an infant in arms may be present during the trial of any person charged with such an offence or during any preliminary proceedings relating to such offence, and, if he is present, he must be ordered to be removed, unless he is the person charged with the offence or his presence is required as a witness or otherwise for the purpose of justice, and then he can only remain so long as his presence is so required (o)

Except in the cases above referred to, and in cases under the Incest Act, 1908 (p), it does not appear that a judge trying a criminal case has any power to exclude the public in general and to hear a case in camera.

SUB SECT. 1—Case for the Prosecution

706 Counsel for the prosecution opens the case for the prosecution to the jury by giving the outline of the evidence and the leading features of the case (q), and then calls his witnesses

for the prosecution.

When a witness is called an objection may be taken as to his competency, he may then be examined as to his competency before he is sworn (r)

If there is no such objection, or if it is made and disposed of, each witness for the prosecution in turn takes the oath or affirmation, and is examined in chief, and may be cross-examined by the defendant or his counsel, and, if cross-examined, may be re-examined by the counsel for the prosecution

The rules as to the examination, cross-examination, and re-examination of witnesses are, with some exceptions, the same in criminal as in civil trials (s).

(i) It is in the discretion of the court whether the order should be made (R v Vaughan (1696), Holt (K B), 689, R v Cook (1696), 13 State Tr 311, 348, R v Goodere (1741), 17 State Tr 1003, at 1015, Selfe v Isaacson (1658), 1 F & F 194). The application may be made at any time (Southey v Nash (1837), 7 C & P 632, R v Murphy (1837), 8 O & P 297, at p 307). The prosecutor was included in the order in R v Newman (1852), 3 Car & Ku 252, at p 260, as it was proposed to examine him as a witness, sed quare. The defendant on a charge of felony must remain in court throughout the trial, unless he is removed for disorderly conduct (see R v Berry (1897), Roscoe, Criminal Evidence, 13th ed, 165, 166, R v Brown (1906), 41 L J 612, Stephen, Digest of Criminal Procedure, 194). A solicitor for either party is entitled to remain in court, although it is proposed to examine him (Pomeroy v Baddeley (1826), Ry. & M 430). Expert witnesses are generally excluded from the order. If a witness disobeys the order and remains in court, he may be punished for contempt, but his evidence, though open to observation, is not thereby made inadmissible (Chandler v Horne (1812) 2 Mood & R 423, Cobbett v Hudson (1852), 1 E. & B. 11, 14, Cook v Nathelcote (1835), 6 O & P 741, Thomas v David (1836), 7 O & P. 350, R v Cooley (1829), Mood & M 329). At the Central Criminal Court it is the regular practice for witnesses to be kept out of court until they are examined.

indictment, counsel for the prosecution should, unless there are exceptional reasons to the contrary, place him in the witness-box so that the defendant may have an opportunity of cross-examining him (u).

SECT. 4.
The Hearing.

709 The prosecution may call witnesses who were not examined before the committing justices and whose names are not on the back of the indictment. Notice of intention to call such witnesses should be given to the defendant, and copies of their proofs should be supplied to the defendant and to the court (v). But, except in charges of treason, to which special rules apply (w), the failure to give such notice and copies of proofs does not render the additional evidence inadmissible (x).

If the counsel for the prosecution puts a witness in the box to enable the defendant to cross-examine him, and the defendant does cross-examine him, then counsel for the prosecution can re-examine the witness, but only on the points touched by the cross-examination (R v Harris (1838), 7 O & P 581, R v Beasley, supra). The defendant is entitled to inspect the indictment to see what witnesses' names are on the back of it (R v Connor (1846), 1 Cox, C C 233, v Lacey (1848), 3 Cox, C C 517); but the court has no power to oblige a prosecutor to give to the defendant the names and addresses of the witnesses on the back of the indictment (R v Gordon (1812), 12 L J (M C) 84).

712 The statement taken by a justice (d) of a person dangerously ill may be used in evidence either for or against a defendant on his trial without further proof, if it purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken and if the court is satisfied by evidence that the witness who made the statement is dead, or that there is no reasonable probability that he will be over able to travel or to give evidence, and that reasonable notice in writing of the intention to take the statement was served upon the person against whom it is proposed to be read in evidence, and that such person or his counsel or solicitor had or might have had, if he had chosen to be present, full opportunity of cross-examining the person who made the statement (e)

up his case

717 At the close of the defendant's evidence, if the defendant is the only witness for the defence, or if he does not give evidence, at the close of the evidence for the prosecution, counsel for the prosecution may, but only when the defendant is represented by counsel, sum up the case for the prosecution, and in so doing may comment on the evidence of the defendant, if he has given evidence, but if he has not given evidence, may not make any comment on the defendant's failing to give evidence (m)

defence

718. After this the defendant or his counsel may address the jury, and if he calls no other witnesses or has not put in any evidence, he has the last word, unless the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General is conducting the prosecution, the defendant, if he has not given evidence on oath, may make a statement not on oath (n)

If there are more defendants than one, they address the jury and cross-examine witnesses in the order in which their names appear on the indictment, or in any order which the judge may think fit (o)

If a defendant intends to call witnesses other than himself, the defendant or his counsel must call such witnesses (p) after opening his case, and these witnesses may be cross-examined by counsel for the prosecution (a)

If there are more co-defendants than one being tried together, and one co-defendant calls evidence which is hostile to another defendant, the co-defendant may cross-examine such a witness (b)

Rebutting
evidence

719 After the witnesses for the defence have given their testimony, the evidence is closed, and the court will not allow fresh evidence to be given, but if any matter arises unexpectedly in the evidence called by the defence, such a matter may be answered by rebutting evidence on behalf of the prosecution (c)

of a trial

724 The judge has power, whenever he deems proper, to discharge a jury in the course of the trial, and to swear a fresh jury and begin the trial of the case again. He is the sole judge of the propriety of such a course (k).

If a juror is incapacitated, the jury may be discharged and a fresh jury called, who may be the remainder of the former jury with another added to their number, but the defendant should be given his challenges afresh (l), and all the jurors should be resworn; the witnesses should be resworn and their oral evidence taken again (m).

SUB SECT 7—Verdict

Verdict.

725 At the close of the judge's summing-up the clerk of the court directs the jury to consider their verdict. They then confer together, and if they appear to have made up their minds, the clerk of the court asks them whether they are agreed on their verdict judge has no power to allow the jury to separate, if the jury do separate in the course of the proceedings, the result is to make the trial bad, and the proper course is to discharge the jury and swear a fresh one and begin again (R v Ward (1867), 10 Cox, C O 573).

(k) This course was pursued in R v Stevenson (1791) 2 Leach, 546, R v Streek (1826), 2 O & P 413 (prisoner ill), R v Sculbert (1794), 2 Leach, 620, R v Edwards (1812) Russ & Ry 224 (juror ill), R v Kinloch (1716), Fort 16 (where at the request of the defendant a jury was discharged in order that the defendant might withdraw a plea of not guilty and plead to the jurisdiction, quare, whether such a course would now be followed, see p 355, ante), R v Stokes (1833), 6 C & P 151 (the trial was postponed at the request of the defendant owing to the absence of one of his witnesses) R v Phillips (1868), 11 Cox, C C 112 (where a juror who had not been summoned was sworn, and see R v Metcalfe (1848), 3 Cox, C C 220), R v Muciae (1892), Roscoe, Criminal Evidence, 13th ed., 189 (juror unlawfully separating himself from the jury and mingling with the public). It seems that it might be a good reason for discharging the jury, if undue practice had been used to keep witnesses out of the way, or to influence them in giving or withholding their evidence or where witnesses are prevented from giving evidence by sudden accidents (see R v Charlesworth (1861), 1 B & S 460, per COCKBURN, C J, at p 504). But it is not a good ground for discharging a jury merely that evidence for the Crown is not forthcoming or that a material witness for the Crown refuses to give evidence (R v Lewis (1909), 78 L. J. (K B) 722 C O A, R v Charlesworth, supra), or that the prisoner has a relation on the jury (R v Wardle (1842), Car & M 617). It is not a sufficient ground for discharging a jury that a material adult witness is not sufficiently acquainted with the nature and obligation of an oath. Where in such a case a judge discharged a jury that the witness might have an opportunity of being instructed, the judges considered that the discharge was improper (R v Wade (1825), 1 Mood C O 86). As to the discharge of a jury who cannot agree on their verdict, see Hinsor v R (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, ibid., 390 Ex Ch., and p 374, post. The discharging of a jury is in the discretion of the judge and his exercise of the discretion is not subject to review (R v Lewis, supra). As to irregularity in the proceedings not discovered till after verdict, see R v Murphy (1869), L. R. 2 P C 535.

(m) In R v Bertrand (1867), L. R. 1 P C 520, the Privy Council expressed an opinion that in a case of felony, when a jury who could not agree on their verdict had been discharged and a fresh jury sworn, it was irregular for the judge, even with the consent of the defendant, to read over from his notes the evidence given before the previous jury, this was the course followed in R v Beere (1843), 2 Mood & B. 472, and in R v Monson (1903), 67 J. P. Jo 267, but see R v Lawrence (1909), 25 T. L. R. 374 (felony), and in R v Foster (1836), 7 C. & P. 495 (misdemeanour).

If the foreman says "Yes," the clerk of the court asks them whether they find the defendant guilty or not guilty, and they deliver their verdict through the mouth of their foreman (n), and the verdict is recorded (o)

SECT. 4.
The Hearing.

The verdict may be either a general verdict of guilty or not guilty on the whole charge, or a verdict of guilty on one part of the charge and not guilty on another part, or a special verdict which finds the facts of the case and reserves the legal inference to be drawn from them for the judgment of the court

Different
verdict.

If several defendants are tried together, the jury may find one or more guilty and others not guilty (p)

726 A jury cannot at common law convict a defendant of an offence of an entirely different character from that named in the indictment (q), e g, if the charge is one of felony, they cannot at common law find the defendant guilty of a misdemeanour, and if the charge is a misdemeanour, they cannot find a verdict of guilty of a felony

Conviction of defendant
of an offence different from that charged in the indictment.

They may, however, at common law, convict of a cognate offence of the same character but of a less aggravated nature, if the words of the indictment are wide enough to cover such an offence (r)

(n) See R v Wooller (1817), 2 Stark 111. In general the assent of all the jury to the verdict pronounced by the foreman in their presence and hearing will be conclusively inferred, aliter, when it is uncertain whether they all heard the verdict (ibid). If a verdict is pronounced and one of the jury is so drunk or otherwise incapable that he cannot or does not assent, a conviction in such a case would, it seems, be bad (see Ex parte Morris (1907), 72 J P 3)

(o) See 1 Chitty, Criminal Law, 636, for the form of entry. In a misdemeanour by consent of the defendant, the verdict may be pronounced out of court, e g, at the judge's house (R v Woodfall (1770), 20 State Tr 895, 903). As to amending a verdict after entry, see R v Virrier (1840), 12 Ad & El 317.

(p) See as to joint receivers, Larceny Act, 1861 (21 & 25 Vict c 96), s 94. On an indictment for a riot against three or more, if the jury acquit all but two and find two guilty, the verdict amounts to an acquittal of the two, unless the indictment charges them with having made a riot with other persons not being tried (2 Hawk P C, c 47, s 8, R v Beach (1809), 2 Cr App Rep 189). The result is similar in a case of conspiracy, if the jury acquit all the defendants but one (R v Thompson (1851), 16 Q B 832, R v Manning (1883), 12 Q B D 241, R v Plummer, [1902] 2 K B 339, O O R.). Where a charge is against several defendants for conspiring together to do several illegal acts, a finding by the jury that one of them is guilty of conspiring with some of the defendants to do one of the acts and guilty of conspiring with other defendants to do another of the acts is bad as amounting to a finding that the defendant is guilty of two conspiracies, whereas the charge is only of one (O'Connell v R (1844), 11 Cl & Fin 155, H L.). Where a charge was against eight defendants for conspiring to effect certain objects, and the jury found three of the defendants guilty generally and four of them guilty of conspiring to effect some of the objects and not guilty of conspiring to effect the other objects, the verdict was held to be bad and repugnant (O'Connell v R, supra).

(q) R v Thomas (1875), L R. 2 Q O R 141; R v. Woodhall, (1872), 12 Cox, C C 240, R v Catherall (1875), 13 Cox, C C 109.

(r) R v Hollingberry (1825), 4 B & C 329, R v Hunt (1811), 2 Camp 363. On an indictment for murder a defendant may at common law be convicted of manslaughter (Mackalley's Case (1611), 9 Co Rep 65 a, 67 b). On a charge of burglary and stealing or of robbery, the jury may find a verdict of larceny (2 Hale, P. C. 302). On a charge of burglary with intent to steal the jury may find a verdict of housebreaking or of stealing in a dwelling-house or of simple larceny (R v Compton (1828), 3 C & P 418, R v. Bulluck (1825) 1 Mood C O.

In cases provided for by statute a jury may find a defendant guilty of an offence different in nature from that charged in the indictment (s)

324, n) On a charge of housebreaking a verdict of simple larceny may be found (R v Brookes (1842), Car & M. 543, and see R v Beaney (1820), Russ & Ry 416) On a charge of assaulting, beating, wounding and occasioning actual bodily harm the jury may find a verdict of a common assault (R v Oliver (1860), Bell, O C 287, R v Yeadon (1861), Le & Ca 81, and see R v Taylor (1869), L R 1 O C R 194, and R v Day (1870), 11 Cox, O C 505, O C R), but on a charge of feloniously wounding the jury cannot find a verdict of a common assault On a charge of assaulting and having unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl the jury may find a verdict of common assault (R v Guthrie (1870), L R 1 O C R 241) On a charge of an indecent assault the jury may find a verdict of a common assault (R v Bostock (1893), 17 Cox, O C 700) On a charge of publishing a defamatory libel "knowing it to be false" the jury may find a verdict of merely publishing a defamatory libel (Boaler v R (1888), 21 Q. B D 284) On a charge of perjury the jury may find a verdict of guilty of the common law misdemeanour of taking a false oath (R v Hodgkins (1869), L R 1 O C R 212) If two persons are jointly indicted for a joint offence and the jury find them guilty of separate offences, judgment cannot be given against both, but on a pardon or nolle prosequi being entered against one, judgment may be given against the other (R v Hempstead (1818), Russ & Ry 344) The jury may acquit one and find the other guilty (R v Gray (1851), 2 Den 86, R v Rendle (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 33) But on an indictment for burglary and larceny against two, one may be found guilty of the burglary and larceny and the other of the larceny only (R v Butterworth (1823), Russ & Ry 520)

(a) On an indictment for embezzlement or fraudulent application or disposition of property, the defendant may be found guilty of simple larceny, or larceny as a clerk or servant or person employed in the public service or police, and on an indictment for simple larceny the defendant may be found guilty of embezzlement or fraudulent application or disposition of property (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s. 72) A defendant on an indictment for false pretences may be found guilty, even though it appears that the offence amounted to larceny (ibid, s 88), but there is no provision enabling a defendant indicted of larceny to be found guilty, if the offence amounts to false pretences If a person is indicted for robbery, he may be found guilty of an assault with intent to rob (ibid, s. 41) If on the trial of any person for a misdemeanour it appears that the offence amounts to a felony, the defendant is not entitled on that ground to be acquitted of the misdemeanour, but the defendant cannot afterwards be prosecuted for the felony on the same facts, unless the court discharges the jury and directs the defendant to be indicted for the felony (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c. 100), s 12) On an indictment for murder the defendant may be found guilty of concealment of the birth of the child alleged to be murdered (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 100), s. 60) On an indictment for any felony except murder or manslaughter, if the defendant is charged with cutting, stabbing, or wounding any person, the jury may acquit the defendant of the felony and find him guilty of unlawfully cutting, stabbing or wounding (Prevention of Offences Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 19), s 5) On an indictment for feloniously shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm the defendant cannot under the Prevention of Offences Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 19), s 5, be found guilty of unlawful wounding (R v Muller (1879), 14 Cox, O C. 356). On an indictment for manslaughter of a person under sixteen, the jury may find the defendant guilty of an offence of cruelty under the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 12 (4). On an indictment for the felony of administering poison or other destructive or noxious thing so as thereby to endanger the life of such person or to inflict upon him any grievous bodily harm, a defendant may be found guilty of the misdemeanour of administering etc. poison etc. to a person with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy such person (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 20, and see ss 23, 24). If a person is indicted of the felony of the riotous demolition of buildings under s 11 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), he may be found guilty of the misdemeanour of riotously injuring such buildings (Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 12). If a person is indicted for rape or for the unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl under the age of thirteen under s. 4 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), he may be found guilty of an offence under ss. 3, 4, or 5 of that Act or of an indecent assault (ibid., s. 9). On an indictment for a corrupt practice at an election a defendant may be found guilty of an illegal practice (Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), s. 52). If a person is indicted for any felony or misdemeanour, he may be found guilty of an attempt to commit the felony or misdemeanour charged (Criminal Procedure Act, 1861 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 9, see R v Brown (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 357, O. O. R., R v Ring (1892), 61 L. J. (M. C.) 116 O. O. R., and R v Williams, [1893] 1 Q. B. 320, O. O. R.). But see R v M'Pherson (1857), Deane & B. 197, where it was held that a defendant could not be convicted of an attempt to steal goods from a house when there were no goods there. This case is, however, of doubtful authority having regard to the decisions last mentioned. See also R v Connell (1853) 6 Cox, O. O. 178, R v Hapgood and Wyatt (1870), L. R. 1 O. O. R. 221.

The judge cannot ask the jury whether they believe the evidence for the prosecution and, on their saying they do, enter a verdict of guilty (R v Farnborough, supra). It is doubtful whether a judge can lawfully put certain specific questions to the jury and, on their answering them in a particular way, direct them to find a particular verdict (see R v Jameson (1896), Shorthand Notes, p. 396, where a verdict of guilty was extracted by this means from an unwilling jury. See O'Brien, Life of Lord Russell of Killowen, p. 282). If, after the jury have given a special verdict, the court enters a general verdict of guilty, an appeal will lie to the Court of Criminal Appeal (see Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), s. 5 (3), see R v Knight (1908), 1 Cr. App. Rep. 186, R v Muirhead (1908), 1 Cr. App. Rep. 189). If no general verdict is given, it seems that the proper course is to move the record into the King's Bench Division (see R v Dudley, supra). If the finding of the jury is ambiguous or inconsistent, and a verdict of guilty has been entered on it, the conviction will be quashed (R v Gray (1891), 17 Cox, O. O. 299, O. O. R.), but see R v Petch (1909), 25 T. L. R. 401, 1 O. A.

entered in accordance with their intention, or they may retire and reconsider the question and bring in another verdict (e).

730 If the jury cannot in court within a reasonable time agree on their verdict, they may be ordered to retire to a room, and a bailiff is sworn to keep them apart (f). They must not separate from the time when they have been directed to consider their verdict until the time when they deliver their verdict or are discharged (g).

Discharge
if jury cannot agree

If the jury cannot agree upon a verdict, they may, at the discretion of the judge, be discharged without giving a verdict, but such a discharge does not amount to an acquittal, and the defendant may be tried again (h).

Verdict of not guilty

731 If the verdict is one of not guilty, the defendant must be immediately discharged, unless there is another indictment against him on which it is proposed to proceed (i).

Special
verdict

If the jury find the facts in a special verdict, the defendant may be detained in custody or admitted to bail until judgment is given.

Previous
conviction

If the verdict is one of guilty and there is another count in the indictment against the prisoner charging him with having been previously convicted, he is arraigned on that count. If he pleads not guilty to the count alleging a previous conviction, the jury, without being re-sworn, are charged to inquire concerning the alleged previous conviction, evidence is given to prove it (k), and the jury give their verdict on the count alleging it.

If a verdict is so insufficiently expressed or so ambiguous that a judgment cannot be founded upon it, it seems that the court may discharge the jury and award a venire de novo (see R v Murphy (1869), L R 2 P C 555, at p 548, and compare R v Woodfall (1770), 20 State Tr 895, 903, 917). Quarr, whether any court except the court of trial now has the power to award a venire de novo. A defendant on a charge of misdemeanour is, on acquittal, entitled to a copy of the record (3 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, 463). On the question whether a defendant acquitted on a charge of felony is entitled to a copy of the record the authorities are conflicting (R v Brangan (1742), 1 Leach, 27, Groenvelt v Burrell (1697), 1 Ld Raym 252, Browne v Cumming (1829), 10 B & C 70).

Respite.

732 If there is no count alleging a previous conviction, or if there is one and the jury have given their verdict on it, the court in charges of treason and felony demands of the prisoner whether he has or knows anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced against him (l)

If the defendant is a female and she has been found guilty of a capital charge, she may allege that she is quick with child, and thereupon a jury of twelve matrons must be impannelled and sworn to try whether or not this is the case. This they do by inspection of the defendant, but it is usual to give them the assistance of a surgeon in their examination. If the jury of matrons finds that she is quick with child, the court respites the offender until she is delivered of a child, or until the expiration of the ordinary period of gestation (m). Upon her delivery, or when such time has elapsed, unless she has been reprieved by the Crown, she should again be brought into court and asked whether she has anything to allege why execution should not be awarded (n). It would seem that she cannot then allege a new pregnancy (o).

733 Any prisoner may, by himself or his counsel, move the court in arrest of judgment.

Motion in arrest of judgment.

The grounds of this motion may be an objection appearing on the face of the record, such as want of certainty in the indictment or omission or insufficient statement of some material allegation, where such defect is more than formal and has not been amended or cured by verdict. The granting of a pardon after the arraignment is also a ground for moving in arrest of judgment (p).

The court may itself without motion arrest judgment, if it is of opinion that no offence in law is disclosed in the indictment (q).

If judgment is arrested, an acquittal is entered and the defendant is entitled to be discharged, unless there is another indictment against him, but the acquittal is no bar to a fresh indictment (r).

734 If judgment is not arrested, it may on good grounds be respited, except in the case of a conviction for murder (s).

735. If judgment is not arrested or respited, the court proceeds then or subsequently to deliver judgment

In cases of treason and felony the defendant must be present when judgment is given (t) In cases of misdemeanour the presence of the defendant is not necessary, but is usually required, unless the judgment is merely to pay a fine, or there is good cause for his absence (u).

Before judgment is given, the court may, in cases where the court has a discretion as to what punishment it shall award (w), hear evidence for the Crown or the defendant on the question what punishment should be awarded (x).

Judgment must be pronounced orally in open court, if there is only one presiding judge, the judgment is pronounced by him, in trials at bar the practice is for the senior puisne judge to deliver judgment (a)

If there has been a verdict of guilty on more counts than one, the proper course is to deliver and enter up a separate judgment on each count (b)

When the judgment has been entered on the record, it cannot be altered, but can be reversed or amended by the Court of Criminal Appeal (e).

Part VI.—Evidence in Criminal Cases.

SECT. 1—General Rules.

737. The rules of evidence which govern the proof of facts in a criminal trial are substantially the same as those which apply in a civil trial (f), but there are some particular points of difference arising from the special nature of criminal proceedings.

General rule of evidence the same in
criminal and in civil cases.

The rules of evidence may be classified under three main heads, (1) those which deal with the burden of proof; (2) those which determine what facts are relevant, and must or may be proved; (3) those which determine the method of proof. All these points are questions of law to be determined by the judge, while the weight of any facts proved, if a case is left to the jury, is a question for the jury to determine.

SUB SECT. 1—The Burden of Proof.

738. In order to decide on whom the burden of proof lies, it is necessary to consider what is the issue or point in dispute. The issue is determined by the pleadings.

Burden of proof

In criminal proceedings the prosecution in the indictment alleges

(c) It appears that a formal judgment is not drawn up, except when the record is made up for the purposes of a certiorari or writ of error (Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, Vol I., 309). But writs of error are now abolished (Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7 c. 23), s. 20 (1)). As to entry of judgment, see Amptell v R (1849), 11 Q. B. 799, O'Connell v R (1844), 11 Cl. & Fin. 155, H. L., R v Powell (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 75, Ryalls v R (1848), 11 Q. B. 781, 798, Gregory v R (1850), 15 Q. B. 974, Ex. Ch., Holloway v R (1851), 17 Q. B. 317.

B. 128, at p. 133. As to the general rules of evidence, see title EVIDENCE. It is a rule of prudence rather than law that requires more stringent proof in criminal than in civil cases (R v White (1860), 4 F. & F. 383, R v Hobson (1823), 1 Law C. O. 261, R v. Blandy (1752), 18 State Tr. 1118, per Loez, B., at 1166).

SECT 1.
General
Rules

certain facts The defendant is called upon to plead to the indictment. If he pleads guilty, he admits that he is guilty of the offence as charged in the indictment, but not necessarily the truth of the facts stated in the depositions (g). If he pleads the general issue, i. e., not guilty, he denies all these facts and thus raises the issue whether the facts alleged in the indictment are true or not. A defendant may also plead one or more of certain special pleas (a), by which he affirms that certain facts are true, the prosecution then either traverses or admits the special plea.

He who affirms must prove

The general rule of evidence is that he who affirms must prove, therefore, a defendant who pleads not guilty throws upon the prosecution the burden of proving that the facts alleged in the indictment are true, and, if he pleads a special plea and the prosecution traverses it, the burden is upon the defendant of proving that the facts alleged in his plea are true.

SUP-SECT 2. —Relevant Facts

Facts that must or may be proved

739 A party can only prove facts relevant to his case, and it is only the party on whom the burden of proof lies who is bound to prove any facts at all.

In all criminal trials, where the defendant pleads not guilty, the burden of proof is on the prosecution, who must prove the facts that are alleged in the indictment, and may prove any other facts which help to prove those facts. If the prosecution does not give sufficient proof of the alleged facts so as to establish a prima facie case, the case must be withdrawn from the jury and a verdict of "not guilty" directed (b).

The defendant, unless he pleads a special plea, need not give any evidence at all, he may content himself with attempting to destroy the case for the prosecution or to prove his own innocence by cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution. If he adduces evidence, it must be relevant to his case, that is, it must tend to disprove the facts alleged by the prosecution or to prove his own innocence.

corpus delicti

740 The prosecution must first give satisfactory proof of the corpus delicti, i. e., must prove that the offence charged has been committed by someone (c). The prosecution must then prove that

(n) Ng, a plea to the jurisdiction, of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit, of a pardon, of justification in libel and of an obligation to repair a highway ratione tenuræ, see p 355, ante. A defendant may also demur to the indictment, but this only raises an issue of law, not an issue of fact.

(c) See 2 Hale, P C 290, R v Burdett (1820), 4 B & Ald 95, at p 162, Evans v. Rimes (1790), 1 Hag Con 355, per Sir WILLIAM SCOTT, at p 105. The corpus delicti may be proved by direct evidence or by irresistible grounds of presumption (ibid.). It is doubtful whether it must be established by some evidence other than the mere confession of the accused (1 Phillips on Evidence, 10th ed, 406, R v Flaherty (1847), 2 Car & Kir 782, R v Wheeling (1789), 1 Leach, 311, R v White (1823), Russ & Ry 508, R v Falkner (1822), Russ & Ry 481, R v Tippet (1823), Russ & Ry 509, R v Eldridge (1821), Russ. & Ry 440, R v Tuffe (1831), 5 C & P 167, R v Burton (1854), Dears C O 282, R v Edgar (1831), 3 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, 478, n, per PATTESON, J., R v Sutcliffe (1850), 4 Cox, C O 270, R v Unkles (1873), 8 I R O L 50, per FITZGERALD, the defendant is the person who committed the offence charged. Any facts which affirmatively prove either of these propositions are relevant evidence for the prosecution (d)

All the details of the alleged criminal transaction are relevant to the case for the prosecution as being part of the res gestæ and should be proved.

SECT. 1.
General
Rules

Res gestæ

J., at p 57, R v Sullivan (1887), 16 Cox O O 347). In charges of murder or manslaughter a conviction can never, it seems, take place unless the body of the person whom the prisoner is accused of having murdered is found or there is evidence, either direct or circumstantial, of the death of the person said to be murdered (see 3 Co Inst 232, 2 Hale, P O 290; R v Downing (1822) Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 5th ed, 240, R v Hendmarsh (1792), 2 Leach, 569, R v Hopkins (1831), 8 C & P 591, R v Tawell (1845), Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 5th ed, per PARKE, B., at p 316). It seems therefore, that in charges of murder a mere confession without proof of the finding of the body or of the death of the person alleged to be murdered is insufficient (see Anon, 1 Leach, 264, n). According to MAULE, J. (R v Burton, supra, at p 54), the rule as to the corpus delicti is a rule of caution and prudence in cases of murder and manslaughter, and not an absolute rule of evidence. In cases of concealment of birth the dead body of the child must be found and identified (R v Williams (1871), 11 Cox, C O 684). As to proof of the corpus delicti in cases of libel, see R v Burdett (1820), 4 B & Ald 95. In charges of larceny there must be evidence that the goods mentioned in the indictment were stolen by someone (R v Dredge (1843), 1 Cox, O O 235), but it is not necessary always to prove that the prosecutor missed any of the goods alleged to be stolen, if from the facts proved the jury may infer that the goods were taken from him (2 East, P O 657, R v Burton (1854), 23 L. J. (M C) 52 C C R, R v Hooper (1857), 1 F & F 85), in such a case the proof of the corpus delicti is inextricably bound up with proof of the connection of the defendant with it. But a person cannot be convicted of stealing goods of an unknown person, unless due proof is made that a felony was committed in respect of these goods (2 Hale, P O 290). In a charge of conspiracy general evidence of the existence of the conspiracy may first be given, before particular facts are proved which show that one or more of the defendants took part in it (Queen Caroline's Case (1820), 2 Brod & Bing 310, H. L. see 2 Starkie on Evidence, 3rd ed, 327, R v Drury (1883), 15 Cox, C O 334, R v Hammond (1799), 2 Esp 719, R v Hunt (1820), 3 B & Ald 566, R v Frow (1839), 9 O & P 129, 475, R v Sidney (1683), 9 State Tr 817, at p 841, R v Shellard (1840), 9 O & P 277, R v Desmond (1868), 11 Cox, C O 146). As to a defendant being found guilty of an offence other than that with which he is charged, see p 371, ante.

(d) See p 378, ante. Thus, while it is not incumbent on the prosecution to prove motive (see p 236, ante), yet evidence may be given for the prosecution to show that the defendant had a motive for committing the crime charged (see R v Cleves (1830), 4 C & P 221, at p 226), and so evidence may be given for the defence to show that the defendant had no motive for committing the alleged crime, or that he had a motive for not committing it (R v Grant (1866) 4 F & F 322, R v Bingham (1811), Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 5th ed, 217, R v Downing (1822), Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 5th ed, 218). Where a special intent is of the essence of an offence (e.g. assault with intent to murder), the special intent must be proved, and proof of a different intent will not suffice (R v Pemberton (1874), L R 2 O C R 119, R v Coppard (1856), Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 5th ed, 217, R v Rooke (1858), 1 F & F 107, but see R v Woodburne (1722), 16 State Tr 53, at 80, 81). But a criminal intent may often be presumed from an act itself (R v Mawgrudge (1707), 1 East, P O 276, R v Maloney (1861), 9 Cox, C O 6, R v Farrington (1811), Russ & Ry 207, R v Ward (1872), L R 1 O C R 356). If it is proved that a person did an act which is criminal only if done by a person in a certain state of the mind (e.g. receiving stolen goods with knowledge that they are stolen), such a state of mind cannot be inferred from the mere act itself and must be proved by accompanying circumstances or other facts (see R v Odly (1851), 2 Den 264, at p 273).

General
Rules

All acts done by the accused or by anyone in his presence or by anyone acting under his orders, and all statements, whether oral or written, made by him or by anyone in his presence or by his authority in his absence, either at the time of the alleged transaction or before or after it, are, if connected with the criminal transaction, relevant and may be proved (e).

Evidence
must be confined to facts connected with the offence

The evidence must be confined to the facts which constitute or are connected with the offence charged, and proof cannot generally be given of other facts which have no connection with this offence (f). If, however, there are other facts which are so inextricably mixed up with the facts which constitute the offence charged as to form one transaction, proof may be given of such other facts (g).

Suborning
evidence.

741 The fact that an accused person has induced or attempted to induce another person to give false evidence on his behalf is relevant to the case for the prosecution and may be proved at the trial (h).

Guilty
knowledge or intent

742 Evidence cannot be given for the prosecution to prove that the defendant is of bad character (i) or has a propensity to commit criminal acts of the same nature as the offence charged (j).

But in cases where a guilty knowledge or intention or design is of the essence of the offence, proof may be given that the defendant did other acts similar to those which form the basis of the charge. Such acts may be proved, whether they were done before or after

(e) See R v Gordon (Lord George) (1781), 21 State Tr. 456, 535, R v Damaris (1709), Foist 214. As to confessions by the defendant, see p. 394, post. There is some doubt as to expressions used in the absence of the accused immediately after the act alleged to be done by the accused (see R v Bevingfield (1879), 14 Cox, C C 341, where, the defendant being charged with the murder of his wife by cutting her throat, the particulars of a statement made by the wife on coming with her throat cut out of the house where the prisoner was were not allowed by COCKBURN, C J, to be given in evidence, but see R v Morgan (1875), 14 Cox, C C 337, R v Foster (1834), 6 C & P 325, Arason v Kinnaird (Lord) (1805), 6 East, 188, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C J, at p. 193, Thompson v Trevanion (1698), Skin 402). As to a statement by a third party made out of the hearing of the defendant but immediately before the commission of an offence, see R v Howkes, Times newspaper, 8th March, 1856, Stephen, Digest of the Law of Evidence, 4.

The fact that a person in respect of whom an outrage or injury is alleged to have been committed made a complaint to a third person soon after the alleged outrage or injury, although such complaint was made in the absence of the defendant, is admissible, and in cases of rape and similar offences the details of the complaint are admissible (see p. 394, post).

the acts which form the basis of the charge, and even if they form or have formed the basis of other charges. Such evidence is admissible to show not that the defendant did the acts which form the basis of the charge, but that, if he did such acts, he did them intentionally and not accidentally, or inadvertently, or innocently, or that they formed a part of a system (k).

SECT. I. General Rules.

Evidence that defendant has committed similar
offences.

(k) Such evidence has been admitted on charges of murder (see R v Geering (1849), 18 L. J. (M. Similar evidence may be admitted on a charge of the unlawful use of instruments to procure a miscarriage (R v. Dale (1889), 16 Cox, C. C. 703, R v Bond, [1906] 2 K. B. 389, C. C. C. 547). In a case of larceny or robbery evidence of similar larcenies or robberies is not admissible to prove the animus furandi (R v Butler (1846), 2 Car. & Kir. 221), except, perhaps, where such evidence would tend to disprove a defence of accident or mistake or bona fides (R v Winkworth (1830), 4 C. & P. 444), and in cases of larceny by a trick evidence of similar larcenies would be admissible to prove system or dishonest intention. In cases of receiving stolen goods with guilty knowledge that they were stolen evidence of the receipt of other stolen property, if part of the same transaction, was admissible at common law (R v Dunn (1828), 1 Mood. C. C. 146, R v Nicholls (1858), 1 F. & F. 51, but see R v Oddy (1851), 2 Den. 264). Now by statute (Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), s. 19), on a charge of receiving stolen goods, evidence that other property stolen within the preceding twelve months was found in the possession of the accused, or that the accused has within five years preceding the charge been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, is admissible to prove guilty knowledge (see R v Grod (1906), 70 J. P. 514, C. C. R., and p. 683, post). As to uttering counterfeit coins see Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), s. 10, see p. 514, post.

SECT 1

General
RulesEvidence of character of

SUB-SECT 3—Evidence as to Character

743 Evidence of the general reputation of the defendant for good character is relevant to the case for the defence, if such evidence is applicable to the particular nature of the charge (l). The defendant is allowed to give such evidence for the purpose of showing that it was unlikely that he should have committed the offence charged (m)

If the defendant gives such evidence (n), he makes his character a matter relevant to the issue, and if he calls witnesses to character, they may be cross-examined by the prosecution both as to his general bad character and as to particular charges against him (o)

conviction
of defendant.

In most cases if evidence of good character has been given and the defendant has been previously convicted, evidence of such previous conviction may be given (p)

If the prisoner himself gives evidence, he can only be cross-examined as to his bad character or as to a previous conviction or charge against him, where the proof that he has been committed or been convicted of another charge is evidence against him to show that he is guilty of the offence with which he is charged (q), or where he has sought to establish his own good character, or the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution, or he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence (r)

(m) R v Rowton, supra, per WILLES, J, at p 38, R v Frost (1840), Gurney's Rep., per TINDAL, C J, at p 749 Evidence of character is only of weight where the other evidence is in even balance, or where there is fair and reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt (R v Davison (1808), 31 State Tr 99, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C J, at p 217, R v Hough (1813), 31 State Tr 1092, per LE BLANC, J, at p 1122, R v Turner (1864), 6 State Tr 565, per HYDE, C J, at p 613, R v Swindsen (1702), 14 State Tr 559, per HOLR, C J, at p 596, R v Dammarie (1710), 15 State Tr 521, per PARKER, C J, at p 604, and see R v Draper (1807), 30 State Tr 959, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C J, at p 1018

(n) This can be done by cross examining witnesses for the prosecution as to the defendant's good character as well as by calling witnesses as to such character (R v Gadbury (1838), 8 C & P 676, R v Shrimpton (1851), 2 Den 319)

(o) See R v Rowton, supra, C C R, R v Hodgkiss (1836), 7 C & P 298 It is not usual to cross-examine witnesses to character or to give rebutting evidence of bad character, unless there is some definite charge against the defendant (R v Hodgkiss, supra, but see R v Rowton, supra) As to the proof of bad character by evidence of circumstances of suspicion, see R v Rogan (1846), 1 Cox, C C 291, and R v Wood (1841), 5 Jur 225

(p) See Previous Conviction Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 111), s 1 If a person tried for any felony gives evidence of good character, a previous conviction of felony against the prisoner may be proved (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s 1 (f)). If a person tried for any offence punishable under the Larceny Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), gives evidence of good character, evidence may be given of a previous conviction charged in the indictment (ibid, s 116) There are similar provisions in the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99) (ibid, s. 37).

744. In a prosecution for receiving stolen goods it is expressly provided (a) that evidence of a previous conviction of the accused may be admitted in order to prove guilty knowledge

SMO 1.
General
Rules.

In a prosecution of a suspected person or reputed thief under s 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (a), for frequenting certain public places with intent to commit felony, it is expressly provided (b) that general evidence of bad character may be given by the prosecution to prove the intent

Receiving Vagrant.

745 In certain cases the commission of one offence after conviction for another offence is an aggravation of the second offence and exposes the offender to a severer punishment, and in most of such cases the previous conviction is alleged in a separate count of the indictment, but the jury are not informed of, and no evidence is given on, this separate count until after a verdict of guilty has been given on some other part of the indictment (c)

Aggravation

In the case of certain statutory offences (d) the previous conviction is a substantive part of the charge, and in such a case the previous conviction is communicated and proved to the jury in the same way as the rest of the case for the prosecution (e)

On the trial of an indictment for non-repair or obstruction of a highway or similar nuisance evidence may be given of a previous conviction against the same defendant in respect of the same highway, and such evidence is generally conclusive as to the road being a highway and the liability of the defendant to repair (f).

746 The character of the prosecutor is not in general a matter relevant to the issue, unless he is also a witness and his credibility is impeached. But it seems it is open to the defence to show, if there is any doubt as to the truth of the charge, that the prosecutor in instituting the prosecution has been influenced by unworthy motives (g) show that she is of general bad character or a common prostitute, or has had immoral intercourse with the accused or with other men, and evidence may be given by witnesses to prove such imputations except as to intercourse with men other than the accused, as regards which the defendant is bound by her answer (h).

SUB-SECT 4 — Credibility of Witnesses

Credibility of
witnesses

747. The credibility of any witness who gives evidence as to the facts either for the prosecution or the defence is material to the issue (i)

Any witness called as to the facts may be cross-examined by the other side as to credit for the sake of impugning his character, credibility, impartiality, memory, accuracy, intelligence, or means of knowledge (k)

General evidence may be given on behalf of either side to show that any witness as to the facts (other than the defendant) called by the opposite side has such a character or reputation that he is unworthy of being believed (l)

A witness other than the defendant may be cross-examined as to particular facts proving his bad character (m), and any witness may be cross-examined as to other facts impeaching his credibility

A witness other than a defendant may be asked on cross-examination whether he has committed a crime, but the witness may object to answer such a question on the ground that it may incriminate him (n) If he answers the question and denies the imputation, he can only be contradicted, if he has been previously convicted, in which case evidence may be given to prove the conviction (o)

Impartiality

748 A witness may be cross-examined as to his impartiality or his connection with the person for whom he gives evidence, and if

SECT. 1.
General
Rules.

he denies the imputation of partiality, evidence may be given to prove that he is not impartial or that he is so closely connected with the person for whom he gives evidence that he is not likely to be impartial (p).

Subject to these exceptions, a witness who denies facts put to him in cross-examination cannot be contradicted as to such facts, unless they are relevant to the issue (q).

(p) See R v Fearn cited in Harris v Tippet (1811), 2 Camp 638. In this case on a charge of larceny the prisoner's counsel was allowed to ask the principal witness for the prosecution whether he had not been charged with robbing his master and whether he had not afterwards said he would be revenged and "would soon fix him in Monmouth gaol", on his denying both suggestions LAWRENCE, J., refused to allow the defence to prove that the witness had been charged, but allowed proof of the words alleged to be used, as such words were material to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. So in R v Shaw (1838), 16 Cox, C C 50; a witness for the prosecution having denied on cross-examination that he had had a quarrel with the prisoner, CAVE, J., allowed evidence in contradiction to be given to prove the quarrel and that the witness had threatened harm to the prisoner. In R v Whelan (1881), 14 Cox, C C 595, on a charge of murder a witness who identified the prisoner as the murderer was cross-examined as to an alleged statement that he had made on a former occasion to the effect that the prisoner was not the murderer. In Stafford's (Lord) Case (1680), 7 State Tr 1293, 1400, evidence was given on behalf of the accused that one of the witnesses for the Crown had bribed witnesses to swear against the accused, and see Langhorn's Case (1679), 7 State Tr 417, 446, and Caroline's Case (1820), 2 Brod & Bing 284, 302, 311, H L. The fact that a witness has accepted a bribe to give evidence or that he has given another person a bribe to induce him to give evidence is material to the issue as going to the impartiality of the witness and may be proved (A-G v Hitchcock (1847), 1 Exch 91, at p 101). A witness may be cross-examined as to a previous statement made by him relative to the subject-matter of the indictment and inconsistent with the evidence he has given, and if he does not distinctly admit that he made such statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it, but before such proof can be given, the circumstances of the statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement (Evidence Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c 18), s 4). A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing relative to the subject-matter of the indictment without the writing being shown to him, but he cannot be contradicted by proof of such writing, unless his attention is first called to those parts of the writing which are to be used to contradict him (ibid, s 5). This is frequently done in the case of depositions of the witness before the examining justices (R v Riley (1866), 4 F & F 964, R v Wright (1866), 4 F & F 967, R v Hughes (1868), Roscoe, Criminal Evidence, 13th ed., 118). If a witness denies that he made such a statement, evidence can only be given to contradict him, when the statement is relevant to the issue. Thus, where a witness for the Crown was asked in cross-examination if he had not previously said that the officers of the Crown had offered him a bribe and he denied having said so, it was held that evidence could not be given to prove that he did say so, as the question whether such a statement had been made was not relevant to the issue (A-G v Hitchcock (1847), 1 Exch 94). A witness may be cross-examined to show that he stands in such a close relation to the defendant that he is not indifferent or impartial, and if he denies the suggestion evidence may be given to prove such relation (Thomas v David (1836), 7 O & P 350).

(q) See A-G v Hitchcock, supra, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p 99. "If the answer of a witness is a matter which you would be allowed on your part to prove in evidence—if it has such a connection with the issue that you would be allowed to give it in evidence—then it is a matter on which you may contradict him." Thus, if a witness is asked whether he has not and denies that he has

Rules

749 If the character of a witness has been impeached either by cross-examination or by direct evidence called for the purpose of impeaching it, the side that calls the witness may give evidence to show that his character is such that he is worthy of credit (r).

SECT. 2 — Method of Proof.

SUB-SECT. 1 — In General

Manner of proving facts the same generally in criminal and civil cases

750 As regards the manner in which facts relevant to the issue must or may be proved there is in general no difference between civil and criminal cases (s), but there are some particular points of difference arising out of the special nature of criminal proceedings. Thus, in criminal proceedings no admissions preliminary to the trial can ordinarily be made by the defendant or his advisers so as to dispense with oral evidence and strict proof of facts necessary to be proved (t).

The plea of guilty at the trial is a formal and conclusive admission of the offence charged in the indictment, and dispenses with the necessity of proving the facts alleged therein.

Admissions

When the plea is not guilty, in cases of misdemeanour the defendant or his counsel may at the trial make other admissions of facts, but in cases of felony no such admissions can be made. Therefore, if the defendant pleads not guilty on a charge of felony, oral evidence is indispensable, whereas if he pleads not guilty on a charge of misdemeanour, such evidence may by agreement be dispensed with in certain cases (a).

made a statement on a question affecting the guilt or innocence of the prisoner inconsistent with the evidence which the witness is giving, such a statement may be proved by the other side (R v Whelan (1881), 14 Cox, C C 595). As to cross-examination of a party's own witness by the party who calls him, see p 364, ante. As to rape, see p 383, ante.

As most crimes are committed in secret, and as the question of intention and guilty mind plays a much more prominent part in criminal than in civil proceedings, direct evidence of the guilt of an accused person is often impossible, and a great deal of the evidence in criminal trials is of the kind which is called indirect or circumstantial or presumptive (R v Burdett (1820), 4 B & Ald 95, per BEST, J, at p 122), and see Report of the Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inspect the Journals of the House of Lords on the Trial of Warren Hastings, Works of Edmund Burke (ed 1826, Bivington), Vol XIV, 399.

It appears from this that, if a criminal case is removed by certiorari and is tried in the King's Bench Division, or on the civil side at the assizes, preliminary admissions can be made, but this only applies generally to misdemeanours, as it is not the practice to remove indictments for felony by certiorari (see title CROWN PRACTICE).

(b) In prosecutions for misdemeanours depositions of a witness who is about to leave the country can, it seems, be taken with the defendant's consent (R v Morphey (1814), 2 M & S 602, where Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., said there was a precedent for such a proceeding in the impeachment against Warren Hastings) Under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 691, if a criminal proceeding is instituted here and it is proved that a witness whose deposition has been taken on oath out of the United Kingdom in the presence of the accused before any justice in the King's dominions, or any British consular officer elsewhere, cannot be found in the United Kingdom, the deposition can be used in evidence (see R v Conning (1868), 11 Cox, C. ## SECTION 2.

Method of Proof

Instances of application of general rule of evidence to criminal proceedings.

758 Apart from the points of difference to which reference has been made, the general rules of the law of evidence as to proof of facts (including facts of which the courts take judicial notice) and of documents are the same in criminal as in civil proceedings (r).

(presumptiones juris), i.e., inferences recognised by law, which "stand instead of proofs till the contrary be proved" (Gilbert, Law of Evidence, 6th ed., 142), and presumptions of fact or mere ordinary inferences of fact but the so called presumptions of fact are only ordinary inferences not specially recognised by law. There are two un rebuttable presumptions of law which are peculiar to criminal procedure, namely, that a child under the age of seven is incapable of committing a crime and that a boy under the age of fourteen is incapable of committing the crime of rape (see p. 240, ante), these presumptions are conclusive in favour of the defendant. There are no un rebuttable presumptions of law in criminal cases which are conclusive against a defendant, except possibly in prosecutions for the non repair etc. of highways (see p. 383, ante). A rebuttable presumption of law is one that establishes a prima facie case, and which, if not rebutted, should lead to a verdict in favour of the side which establishes the presumption. Instances of such a presumption peculiar to criminal cases are the presumption that a person found in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is guilty of larceny, or of receiving stolen goods with guilty knowledge, that an infant between the age of seven and fourteen years is doti incapax (see p. 239, ante), the presumption of intention, i.e., that every man is to be deemed to have intended the natural and probable consequences of his acts (R v Dixon (1814), 3 M & S 11, at p. 15, R v Harvey (1823), 2 B & C 257, at p. 264, R v Meade, [1909] 1 K B 895, O O A, and see p. 236, ante), is a presumption which, though not peculiar to criminal law, is more generally applicable to criminal than to civil cases, so is the presumption of the innocence of a person accused of a crime (R v White (1865), 4 F & F 383). The presumption of marriage from cohabitation is common to civil and criminal cases, but is not applicable on a charge of bigamy (see pp. 393, note (t), 534, post). The presumption omnia rite esse acta, i.e., that a man who has acted in a public capacity was duly appointed and has properly discharged his official duties, is common to criminal and civil proceedings (for its application to criminal proceedings see R v Gordon (1789), 1 Leach, 515, R v Rees (1834), 6 C & P 606, R v Jones (1809), 2 Camp 131, R v Gardner (1810), 2 Camp 513, R v Verelst (1813), 3 Camp 432, R v Howard (1812), 1 M & D 187, R v Borrett (1833), 6 C. & P. 124, R v Murphy (1837), 8 C & P 297, R v Newton (1844), 1 Car & Kir 469, R v Townsend (1841), Car & M 178, R v Manwaring (1856), Dears & B 131 at p. 142, R v Cresswell (1876), 1 Q B D 416, O C R, R v Stewart (1876), 13 Cox, O C 296, at p. 297, R v Roberts (1878), 11 Cox, O C 101, O O R, R v Garvey (1887), 16 Cox, O C 252, O O R, but see R v Eases (1857), Dears & B 369). There are some statutory presumptions which are peculiar to criminal cases, e.g., the presumption of innocence on a charge of bigamy from the fact that the husband or wife of the accused has been continually absent for seven years before the second marriage and was not known by the accused to be living within such time (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 57). There are statutory presumptions of guilt from the making or possessing etc. of coining tools (Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), s. 24), from the possession of forged instruments (Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), ss. 13, 45), from the possession of public stores (Public Stores Act, 1873 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 25), s. 7), from acting or behaving as the master or mistress of a disorderly house (Sunday Observance Act, 1780 (21 Geo. 3, c. 49), s. 2), from the finding of instruments of gaming in any place suspected to be used as a common gaming house (Gaming Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 109), s. 8), from being found by night in possession without lawful excuse of any instrument of housebreaking (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 58), and see Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed., Vol. I., 289.

(r) See title EVIDENCE. As to proof of handwriting, see Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), s. 8, and R v Silverlock, [1891] 2 Q. B. 766 C. C. R.

SLOT. 2

Method of ProofRule as to 'best
evidence'

Thus, the rule requiring that the best evidence of which a fact is capable should be given to prove it applies to criminal cases, and makes it necessary that the contents of a written document should be proved by the production of the document alone (s), except when the written document is lost or destroyed or is in the possession of the adverse party, who does not produce it after being served with a proper notice to produce, or is in the possession of a person who is privileged to withhold it and who insists on his privilege, or where the production of the document would be physically impossible or highly inconvenient, or where the document is of a public nature and some other mode of proof has been specially substituted (t)

The rule as to the "best evidence" is confined to written documents or things on which something is written or printed or engraved. The rule does not apply to other chattels the production of which in court is not essential, and evidence can be given of the condition etc. of such chattels without their production (u)

(s) Gilbert on Evidence, 6th ed., 3, Queen's Case (1820), 2 Brod & Bing 284, II 1.

(t) See Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, 13th ed., 2, R v Doran (1791), 1 Esp 127, R v Kitson (1853), Dears C C 187 (insurance must be proved by production of policy), R v Hube (1792), Peake, 1b0 (matter of record cannot be proved by parol evidence), R v Rowland (1858), 1 F & F 72 (proceedings in county court other than evidence must be proved by official documents), R v Dillon (1877), 14 Cox, C C 4 (in proceedings before justices information, if in writing and in existence, must be produced), and R v Regan (1887), 16 Cox, C C 203 (to prove that the defendant sent a telegram original of message must be produced, or its destruction proved). The mere circumstance that a written account of the fact to be proved exists does not exclude parol evidence of the fact (R v Lyster (1722), 16 State Tr 94, at p 214). Thus, to prove perjury in county court proceedings the judge's notes need not be produced, but the evidence given can be proved by parol (R v Morgan (1852), 6 Cox, C C 107), printed matter can be given in evidence without producing the manuscript (R v Watson (1817), 2 Stark 116, 129), evidence can be given of the resolutions proposed at a meeting without producing the paper from which the resolutions were read (R v Sheridan (1811), 31 State Tr 543, 671, R v Hunt (1820), 3 B & Ald 566, R v Moors (1801), 6 East, 419, n). If persons who act in a public capacity have been appointed by a document in writing, in order to prove their appointment it is not necessary to produce the document, but evidence may be given that the persons have acted in the alleged capacity (R v Gordon (1789), 1 Louch, 515, and cases cited on p 389, ante). As to admissions of a party relating to a written document which is not produced, see Slatterie v Pooley (1840), 6 M & W 664, the rule in which is applicable to criminal cases, but there seems to be no reported case of its being applied to such cases (Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, 7).

(u) R v Francis (1874), L R 2 C C R 128. The cases of R v Robinson (1865), L & Ca 604, and R v Farr (1864), 4 F & F 336, can hardly be regarded as authorities to the contrary. In R v Hunt (1820), 3 B & Ald 566, 575, parol evidence was given of the inscriptions on banners. The fact that a document is in a particular person's handwriting may be proved in a criminal case in any of the different ways in which it may be proved in a civil case, no one of such ways is in law better than another (see Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed., Vol II, p 1336). So absence of consent of the owner of property to an act can in some cases be proved by other evidence than that of the person whose consent is necessary (R v Hazy (1826), 2 C. & P 458, R v Allen (1826), 1 Mood. C. C 154).

the defendant a notice to produce the document at the trial, and if the defendant does not produce it at the trial and proof is given tracing the document to the possession of the defendant or his solicitor etc., and showing that the notice to produce was duly served, the prosecution may give secondary evidence of the document (v)

If the defendant wishes to give evidence as to the contents of a document which is in the possession of the prosecutor, he must serve the prosecutor with a subpoena duces tecum. The prosecutor is not a party, for criminal proceedings are at the suit of the Crown, and a notice to produce served on the prosecutor does not enable the defendant to give secondary evidence, if the original is not produced (a)

If it is proved that a defendant read in the hearing of a witness a letter or other document or part of it, evidence can be given by the witness of what he heard without giving the defendant notice to produce (R v Layer (1722), 16 State Tr 94, at p 170, R v Moors (1801), 6 East, 419, n). If copies of letters are found in the possession of the defendant and are seized, such copies may be given in evidence against him, and it is not necessary to produce the originals (R v Francia (1717), 15 State Tr 897, 941). A notice to produce a document known to have been destroyed is unnecessary, and secondary evidence can be given on proof of the destruction (R v Sprugge, cited Hov v Hall (1811), 11 East, 276, R v Haworth (1830), 4 C & P 254). Notice is not necessary to produce a duplicate original (Philpston v Chase (1809), 2 Camp 110, Colling v Treweek (1827), 6 B & C 394, R v Watson (1817), 2 Stark 116, 129) or a counterpart (see Burleigh v Stibbs (1793), 5 Term Rep 465, Roe d West v Davis (1806), 7 East, 363), or a notice (see Colling v Treweek (1827), 6 B & C 394, at p 398, Joy v Orchard (1799), 2 Bos & P 39, Kinn v Beaumont (1822), 3 Brod & Bing 288). It is not necessary to serve a notice to produce a document when, from the nature of the case, the defendant knows that he is charged with its possession, e.g., when the defendant is charged with stealing the document (R v Achilles (1784), 1 Leach, 294, compare Colling v Treweek, supra, per BAYLEY, J, at p 398, and Leeds v Cook (1803), 4 Esp 256), if a defendant is charged with forging a document, and the document is in his possession, a notice to produce is necessary (R v Haworth (1830), 4 C & P 254, R v Fitzsimons (1869), 4 L R C C R 1). In an indictment against a solicitor for perjury in swearing that there was no draft of a certain document notice to produce the draft is necessary (R v Elworthy (1867), 1 L R 1 C C R 103). If a document is last seen in the possession of a defendant, it lies on him to trace the document out of his possession (R v Thistlewood (1820), 33 State Tr 682, per ABBOTT, C J, at p 758). A notice to produce need not be in writing, but generally is, and in criminal cases, if the defendant is in custody and has no solicitor, it must be in writing. It may be served on the defendant himself or upon his solicitor (A - G v L Merchant (1772), 2 Term Rep 201, n). It must be served within a reasonable time of the trial, i.e., within such time as to enable the defendant to get the document from the place where it is (R v Ellcombe (1833), 5 C & P 522, R v Haworth (1830), 4 C & P 254, R v Kitson (1853), Deans C O 187, R v Barker (1858), 1 F & F 326, Hughes v Budd (1840), 8 Dowl 315). A notice to produce should not be served on a Sunday (Hughes v Budd, supra, per PATTERSON, J, at p 317).

SECT 2
Method of
Proof

If a document is in existence and its production is procurable by a subpoena duces tecum, secondary evidence cannot be given of it, unless such a subpoena is served on the person who has the document and he refuses on a good ground of privilege to produce the document (b)

If the person who has possession of the document is outside the United Kingdom, and all reasonable attempts have been made to procure the document and the person refuses to give it up, secondary evidence may, it seems, be given (c)

Secondary
evidence of
documents
that cannot be produced

760 If it is proved that it is impossible or highly inconvenient to produce a document or a thing on which there are inscriptions or representations which it is desired to prove, secondary evidence may be given of such document or thing (d)

On the same principle secondary evidence may be given of such a document or thing, if the original is in a foreign country by the law of which it cannot be removed (e).

Proof of
public
documents
Copies.

761 If a document is of a public nature, it is admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody without further proof (f) Copies of such documents, if officially certified, are by various statutes made admissible in evidence in the place of the originals (g).

Jur 963 But if the defendant does not produce the document when it is called for, and the prosecution tenders secondary evidence, the defendant is not precluded from then producing a document which he alleges is the original and from asking the witness who is giving secondary evidence whether it is not the original and, on the witness denying it, from giving evidence to prove that it is the original. The judge is bound in such a case to hear the evidence, and, if he is satisfied that it is the original, must exclude the secondary evidence (Boyle v Wiseman (1855), 10 Exch 647) The effect of such evidence being given, if the judge believes it, is to let in the document which the defendant alleges to be the original (ibid)

The ground of this decision was that the coffin-plate was in the circumstances removable and might have been produced (see R v Hinley (1843), 1 Cox, C O 12, at p 13) But in ordinary cases, where there has been a burial and no exhumation, secondary evidence of the inscription on a coffin-plate would be admitted

(g) As to the statutes which expressly provide for the proof of particular public documents by means of copies, see Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed., Vol. II., p 1153; Wills on Evidence, 2nd ed., Appendix A, "Public Documents," p 422, and title EVIDENCE. Any public document for the proof of which by means of a copy there is no statutory provision may be proved by an examined copy or extract signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is intrusted (Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99),

Public documents are documents drawn up by public functionaries in the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of Government with reference to the transactions which they are required to enter in the course of their public duty and which occur within the circle of their own personal knowledge and observation (h)

SUB-SECT. 3—Hearsay Evidence

762 The rule as to the inadmissibility of hearsay applies in general to criminal trials. The exceptions to the rule also apply (i), but there are also two exceptions which are peculiar to criminal cases, namely, (1) dying declarations and (2) complaints in cases of rape and similar offences.

Dying declarations are only admissible where the death of the person who made them is the subject of the charge (h) s 14) Proclamations, treaties, and other acts of state of any foreign State or of any British Colony, and all judgments and other judicial proceedings, and all affidavits, pleadings and other legal documents filed or deposited in any such court, may similarly be proved by authenticated copies (ibid, s 7). A conviction or acquittal of a person charged with an indictable offence may be proved by a copy of the record with the formal parts omitted, certified, or purporting to be certified, by the officer having custody of the records of the court where the conviction or acquittal took place (ibid, s 13), see also as to proof of conviction, Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c 18), s 6, Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict c 112), s 18. Any proclamation, order, or regulation issued by the Sovereign or by the Privy Council, either before or after 26th June, 1868, and any proclamation, order, or regulation issued by the Treasury, the Admiralty, the Secretaries of State, the Board of Trade, and the Local Government Board may be proved by the production of a copy of the Gazette purporting to contain such proclamation etc., or by the production of a copy of such proclamation etc., purporting to be printed by the Government printer, or under the superintendence or authority of the Stationery Office, or by a copy or extract purporting to be certified (Documentary Evidence Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 37), s 2, see also Documentary Evidence Act, 1882 (45 Vict c 9), and Documentary Evidence Act, 1895 (58 Vict c 9)).

Evidence of reputation to prove a marriage is available in all criminal cases, except in bigamy (R v Atkinson (1814), 1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., p 159, R v Woodward (1838), 8 C & P 561). In bigamy the prosecution cannot prove the first marriage by reputation (Catherwood v Caslon (1844), 13 M & W 261, at p 265), but even in bigamy, if the defendant sets up as a defence that at the time of the alleged "first marriage" the person with whom he or she went through the ceremony of marriage was already married and had a husband or wife alive, the defendant can prove by reputation the marriage which he sets up (R v Wilson (1862), 3 F & F 119).

In R v Edmunds (1909), 25 T L R 808, C C A., depositions of a woman, taken when she expected to recover and on a charge of attempted murder, were held admissible on a charge of murdering the woman.

The admissibility of the particulars of a complaint made soon after the commission of an alleged offence in the absence of the defendant by the person in respect of whom a crime is alleged to have been committed is peculiar to rape and similar offences (l) In other cases the fact of a complaint having been made is admissible, but the details are not (m)

SUB-SECT 4—Confessions by Defendant

Admissions or confessions
by defendant
before trial

763 All statements relevant to the issue which are made by a party (n) can be proved in evidence against the party who made them, unless they are privileged from disclosure (o), subject to this exception, that admissions or confessions of guilt made by a defendant before his trial can only be proved against him, if they were made freely and voluntarily i e, without being induced by hopes held out or fear or threats caused or used by a person in authority

Only admissible
if made voluntarily

In giving evidence of such admissions or confessions it lies upon the prosecution to prove affirmatively to the satisfaction of the judge who tries the case that such admissions were not induced by any promise of favour or advantage or by the use of fear or threats or pressure by a person in authority (p)

Person in authority

By a person in authority is meant any magistrate (q), any police or other officer or person having custody of the defendant (r), the prosecutor and any person acting on behalf of the prosecutor for the purpose of having the defendant in custody or preferring a complaint against him (s)

If the inducement is made by a person not in authority in the presence of a person in authority, and is acquiesced in by the person in authority, the confession made in consequence of such an inducement is just as inadmissible as if it had been made by the person in authority (t)

An inducement made not to the accused himself, but to someone else, with the expectation that it will be communicated to the accused, may have the effect of making a confession inadmissible, unless it is shown that the confession was not brought about by the inducement (a)

It is for the judge in each case to decide whether on the facts the confession is or is not admissible (b)

A master of a servant is not a person in authority with regard to this rule, if the master is not the prosecutor, and if the charge in respect of which the confession is made has no relation to the person or property of the master or of any member of his family (R v Moore (1832), 2 Den 522, and see R v Steeman (1833), Deans C C 249). In R v Simpson (1834), 1 Mood C C 410, a confession made in consequence of threats and promises by the prosecutor's relations was held inadmissible. In cases of felony anyone can arrest the offender (see p. 296, ante), and therefore anyone who threatens to imprison a person accused of felony puts himself in the position of a prosecutor within the meaning of the rule and is a person in authority (R v Parratt (1831), 4 C & P 570).

But a statement made by one of two prisoners to the other in the presence of the prosecutor and a constable ("You had better tell Mr —— the truth") does not come within the rule and does not make a subsequent confession by the other prisoner inadmissible, for the confirmation of a person in authority cannot be necessarily inferred in such a case (R v Parker (1861), L R 1 C C 42).

O. 639, R v Warringham (1851), 2 Den. 447 n., where the prosecutor said to a prisoner accused of larceny, "It is of no use to deny, I have seen the piece of goods at the station house," and on the prisoner admitting that he had "done it," said it would be best for him if he would tell how it was transacted, R v Doherty (1871), 13 Cox, (C. C. 2), where a police constable said to the prisoner, "It is better for you to tell the truth and not put people to the extremities you are doing" (this was held to make inadmissible a statement made on the same day about eight hours afterwards to another constable), and see R v Dale (1871), 11 Cox, O. R., where the prosecutor said to the prisoner, who was accused of stealing corn, "You had better tell me all about the corn that is gone." Such expressions as "You had better tell the truth," or "It is better for you to tell the truth," when uttered by a person in authority, have acquired a sort of technical meaning importing either a threat or a benefit (R v Jarvis (1867), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 96, per KELLY, C. B., and WILLES, J., at p. 99).

Confessions have been held admissible in the following cases:—R v Row (1809), Russ & Ry 153, where persons who had nothing to do with the apprehension, prosecution, or examination of the prisoner admonished him in the presence of a constable to tell the truth, and see R v Gibbons (1823), 1 O. & P. 97, R v Moore (1852), 2 Den. 522, R v Sleeman (1853), Dears O. A confession is admissible, if the inducement has no reference to the defendant's escape from the charge brought against him (R v Lloyd (1834), 6 C. & P. 393, R v Green (1834), 6 C. & P. 655), or where the words used by the person in authority import no promise or threat (R v Jones (1872), 12 Cox, C. The mere use of artifice to obtain a confession does not make the confession inadmissible, but a confession so obtained has very little weight (R v Thomas (1836), 7 C & P 345, R v Shaw (1834), 6 O & P 372, R v Derrington (1826), 2 C & P 418, R v Burley (1818), 1 Phillips on Evidence, 10th ed., 420). Statements made by a defendant in answer to questions put by a police constable or prosecutor are not ipso facto inadmissible (R v Reason (1872), 12 Cox, O C 228, R v Brackenbury (1893), 17 Cox, O C 628, R v Hirst (1896), 18 Cox, O C 374, Rogers v Hawken (1898), 67 L. P. 827, R v Knight (1905), 20 Cox, O C 711). A constable may ask a suspected person questions before taking him into custody, to ascertain whether there are grounds for apprehending him, a constable should not ask questions of a person in custody (R v Berriman (1854), 6 Cox, O C 388, R v Reason (1872), 12 Cox, O C 228), but the mere fact that a statement is made in reply to a question put by a constable does not make the statement inadmissible (R v Best, [1909] 1 K. B. 692, O C A., disapproving of R v Gavin (1885), 15 Cox, 658). A magistrate has no right to ask the accused any questions, except questions incidental to the conduct of the examination, e.g., whether the accused wishes to cross-examine a witness, or to give evidence, and the statutory questions prescribed by s. 18 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), unless the accused gives evidence under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), if the magistrate does interrogate an accused who does not so give evidence, the answer of the accused is inadmissible as evidence against him (R v Berriman (1854), 6 Cox, O C 388, R v Pettit (1850), 4 Cox, O C 164, R v Wilson (1817), Holt (N. confessions or admissions are made by an accomplice in the presence of the other party in such circumstances that the other party has an opportunity of contradicting such statements at once so far as they concerned himself and does not contradict them, then the statement of the accomplice becomes evidence against such other party, and a confession may be inferred from the conduct and demeanour of the prisoner when he hears such a statement (f)

Statement made in the presence
defendant

766 Any statement made in the presence of the accused is evidence against him, if he had an opportunity of contradicting it at once and did not, and if the circumstances are such that he would naturally be expected to contradict it, if he did not admit it (g)

Evidence of this kind is not admissible at all against the accused, when the statement is made in such circumstances that he had no opportunity of contradicting it at once, e g, if it is made when the prisoner is before a magistrate (h)

a confession must be given in evidence

767 If evidence of a confession by an accused person is given on behalf of the prosecution, the whole of the confession must be used, the prosecution must take the whole of it together, and cannot select one part and leave another (i) But if part of a statement tends to show the guilt of the accused and part of it to show his innocence, the jury may, if they choose, believe the part which is against him and disbelieve that which is in his favour (k)

Depositions of the defendant upon an inquiry before commissioners appointed to investigate the origin of fires (in Quebec) and authorised to examine witnesses on oath, were held by the Privy Council to be admissible in evidence against him on his trial for arson (R v Cote (1873), L R 4 P C 599), and see R v Goldshede (1844), 1 Car & Kir 607, R v Chadley (1860), 8 Cox, C C 365, R v Laurent (1898), 62 J P 250. Under the bankruptcy law (see Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict c 52), s 17 (3) and title BANKRUPTCY, Vol II, p 73) a bankrupt in his examination in bankruptcy is bound to answer all questions touching matters relating to his trade, dealings, or estate, or which might tend to disclose any secret grant, conveyance or concealment of his lands, tenements, goods, money or debts, and he cannot object that his answers may incriminate him, and his answers though tending to incriminate him, may be given in evidence against him on a criminal charge, except in a prosecution for the misdemeanours mentioned in s 1 of the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), and in ss 77 to 84 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), see Larceny Act 1861 s 85, Larceny Act, 1901, s 2, and Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 71) s 27, and see R v Scott (1856), Deas & B 47, R v Cross (1856), Deas & B 68, R v Robinson (1867), L R 1 C C R 80, R v Hillum (1872), 12 Cox C C

A bankrupt, when so examined might object to answer a question on the ground that it does not relate to the matter on which he may be examined, but, if he does not so object and answers a question which does not relate to such matters, his answer may be proved against him in other proceedings (R v Sloggett (1856), Dears C O 656). A witness, other than the bankrupt examined under s 17 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict c 52), may refuse to answer questions on the ground that his answers may incriminate him (Re Frith, Ex parte Schofield (1877), 6 Ch D 230, C A). The answers of a bankrupt in an examination under s 24 or s 27 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict c 52), cannot be used against him in prosecutions for the misdemeanours mentioned in s 1 of the Larceny Act, 1901, or ss 77—84 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 71), s 27 (2)). Quære, whether such answers can be used in prosecutions for other offences, see Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed, p 329. The exception in the Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 71), s 27 (2), as regards the misdemeanours specified above, does not apply to a statement of affairs filed by a bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict c 52), s 16, and such a statement may be used in evidence against him in a prosecution under ss 77—84 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), and s 1 of the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10) (R v Pike, [1902] 1 K B 552, C O R). SECT. 3.
Competency of Witnesses
in Criminal Proceedings

Persons who are not incompetent for the specified reasons to give evidence are compellable to give evidence (a), unless they are privileged from making disclosures (b). But the defendant in a criminal prosecution and the husband or wife of the defendant are incompetent witnesses for the prosecution except in certain cases (c), and in most criminal proceedings (d) are only competent witnesses for the defence subject to certain limitations.

Witnesses who are competent to give evidence in criminal cases are also compellable to give evidence subject to the same grounds of privilege as in civil proceedings (c), and subject to this further

(a) The common law, it has been said, knows no distinction between competent and compellable witnesses (Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed., Vol. I, p. 617, n. 6), but it seems that the King, foreign sovereigns and foreign ambassadors, who are not compellable to give evidence, are competent witnesses: see Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed., Vol. II, p. 989.

(b) Persons who are privileged from making disclosures are—husbands and wives, who are privileged from disclosing communications made to one another during marriage, lawyers and clients, who are privileged from disclosing confidential communications made for the purpose of obtaining legal advice (except communications made for the purpose of committing a crime or communications which are part of a criminal or unlawful proceeding), public officers, who are privileged from disclosing facts or documents the disclosure of which they declare to be injurious in the public interest. A witness may also refuse to answer a question the answer to which may tend to criminate him by exposing him to a criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture. It seems that a minister of religion is not privileged from giving evidence of confessions made to him under the seal of secrecy (see title EVIDENCE). The judge who tries a case cannot be called as witness in the case, and, it seems, may object to give evidence in another case as to matters with which he became acquainted while he was acting as judge (Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed., Vol. I, p. 665, Vol. II, p. 987). As to advocates giving evidence of facts etc. which they have learned while acting as advocates but which were not confidentially communicated to them, see title BARRISTERS, Vol. III, p. 396.

A communication made by way of confession to a minister of religion, is probably not privileged and the recipient may be compelled to disclose it, though in many instances the judges have shown a great disinclination to compel such disclosure.

Sub SECT 2—Evidence of Defendant

771 The defendant in a criminal proceeding was not at common law (h) a competent witness either for the prosecution or for the defence on his trial He could, however, make a statement not on oath, and he still can do this instead of giving evidence (i)

If a defendant is indicted jointly with other persons, he cannot at common law (h) give evidence on his trial against or for any of his co-defendants, if they are tried along with him, but, if two or more defendants, though indicted jointly, are tried separately, a defendant who is not being tried may give evidence against or for a co-defendant (l)

A defendant who, being indicted with others, has pleaded guilty may give evidence against or for his co-defendants, and even a defendant who has pleaded not guilty, if in the course of the trial he withdraws his plea and pleads guilty, or if he is acquitted, can give evidence against or for his co-defendants If an indictment contains several counts and one of the defendants pleads guilty to one of the counts, and it is desired to call him as witness against another defendant, the proper course is to take a verdict of acquittal on the other counts before calling him

A defendant in respect of whom a verdict of not guilty or a nolle prosequi has been entered may give evidence for or against a co-defendant (m)

772 In a prosecution for the non-repair of a highway or bridge or for a nuisance to a highway, river, or bridge, and other prosecutions which are instituted for the purpose of trying or enforcing a civil right only, it is provided by statute (n) that the defendant shall be a competent and compellable witness for either the prosecution or the defence (o). In no other case is a defendant competent to give evidence for the prosecution on his trial (a).

773 Every defendant is now by statute a competent witness for the defence at every stage of criminal proceedings either on his own behalf or on behalf of any person who is tried along with him, but he cannot be called as a witness except upon his own application (b);

(n) Evidence Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 14)

(o) I.e., the defendant is compellable to give evidence for the prosecution, competent to give evidence on his own behalf, and compellable to give evidence for the defence of other persons who are indicted along with him.

(a) The Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), s 12, as amended by the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67) (see schedule) provides that a person accused of any offence under the first named Act is to be competent, but not compellable, to give evidence. This means, it seems, to give evidence for the defence only, the section as it stands might seem to sanction the giving of evidence by the accused in such cases for the prosecution, but, in the absence of express words giving such sanction or of a provision making the defendant a compellable as well as a competent witness, the section, so far as it relates to the person charged, would probably be held to refer to the defence only. If this part of the section only refers to evidence for the defence, it seems unnecessary, as the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), which permits a defendant in a criminal prosecution to give evidence, applies to all criminal proceedings (see Charnock v Merchant, [1900] 1 Q B 474). The language of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), s 12 is mainly taken from the repealed Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 41) s 12, which, being passed before the Criminal Evidence Act 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), was then needed, as without it the accused could not give evidence. No such provision was needed after the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), and it is not clear whether its insertion in the Act of 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), has any effect as regards the evidence of the person charged. It seems to have been inserted per incuriam.

(b) Criminal Evidence Act 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), s 1. The Act came into force on 12th October, 1898 (s 7(2)), and applies to all criminal proceedings notwithstanding any enactment in force at the commencement of the Act, but does not affect the provisions of the Evidence Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 14) (see supra). At the time of the passing of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), there were a number of statutes in force which made a defendant, or the wife or husband of a defendant competent to give evidence; it seems that all those Acts are superseded by the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36) and are now unnecessary, so far as they relate to the subject-matter of that Act (see Charnock v Merchant, [1900] 1 Q B 474, Stephen, Digest of the Law of Evidence, 6th ed., p 124, Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed. Vol II, p 977, R v Ills (1899), 34 L J 616, R v Dunning (1899), 34 L J 33, R v Brazil (1899), 63 J P 138). The Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 14), is the governing Act as regards the evidence of defendants and wives or husbands of defendants (see Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), s 6(1)), and even subsequent Acts containing provisions relating to the same subject-matter must unless they contain words expressly varying the Criminal Evidence Act 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), be construed subject to

774 The defendant gives his evidence like other witnesses on oath or affirmation, and, unless otherwise ordered by the court, from the witness-box or other place from which the other witnesses give their evidence (c). He is not, however, treated altogether as an ordinary witness or as a person who might naturally be expected to be called as a witness (d).

If a defendant has given evidence in his own behalf which is not adverse to a co-defendant, and a co-defendant examines him in his own defence, the defendant who gives evidence becomes a witness for the co-defendant who examines him (e).

If a defendant gives evidence on his own behalf, it is no objection to a question put to him in cross-examination that it may tend to criminate him as to the offence charged (f), but he must not be asked, and if asked cannot be required to answer, any question tending to show that he has committed or been convicted of or charged with any offence other than that with which he is then charged or that he is of bad character, (1) unless the proof that he has committed or been convicted of such other offence is admissible to show that he is guilty of the offence with which he is then charged (g), or (2) unless he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses for the prosecution with a view to establish his own good character, or has given evidence of his good character, or (3) unless the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or of the witnesses for the prosecution (h), or (1) unless

Such an imputation is not involved, if the defendant merely states that the evidence given by the prosecutor is a lie and that the prosecutor is a liar (R v Rouse, [1904] 1 K B 184, O C R.) or if the defendant suggests that he was employed as an informer by a detective who was a witness for the prosecution (R v he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence (i).

SUB SECT 3—Evidence of Wife or Husband of Defendant

775. At common law (k) the wife or husband of a defendant cannot give evidence for the prosecution or for the defence on the trial of the defendant, except in cases of offences committed by the defendant against the person or liberty of the other party to the marriage, and in such cases the wife or husband of the defendant can be compelled to give evidence for the prosecution without the consent of the other party to the marriage (l).

According to the weight of authority, this exception does not apply to cases of treason (m).

(i) If such questions are asked in circumstances that do not come within the specified exceptions, and the defendant is convicted, the conviction is bad and will be set aside (Charnock v Merchant, [1900] 1 Q B 414, R v Rouse, [1901] 1 K B 184, C C R, R v Bridgwater, supra).

It seems that if a marriage is brought about by fraudulent misrepresentations, and the husband or wife is on his or her trial for a charge based on those representations, the wife or husband cannot give evidence against the defendant (R v Sergeant (1826), Ry & M 352), but see R v Perry (1791), 2 Hawk P C 601. Quare, whether the proper rule is that such evidence could be given, if the representations are of such a nature as to make the marriage void (see Moss v Moss, [1897] P 263).

In a prosecution for bigamy the true wife or husband of the defendant cannot be called as a witness (1 Hale, P C 693, R v Griggs (1660), T Raym 1, R v Peat (1834), 2 Lew C C 258), but the false wife or husband can give evidence (1 Hale, P C 693, and see R v Young (1847), 2 Cox, C C 291). Nothing in the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c 36), affects the case where the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence can be called at common law as a witness without the consent of the person charged (s 4 (2)). The dying declarations of a wife or husband are admissible as evidence against the husband or wife when charged with the murder or manslaughter of the person who made the declaration (R v Woodcock (1769), 1 Leach, 600, R v Johns (1790), 1 Leach, 504, n).

In all cases where a wife or a husband is a competent witness for the prosecution against the other party to the marriage, the wife or husband is a competent witness for the defence (n)

If more persons than one are indicted and tried together, no wife or husband of any defendant can at common law (o) give evidence either for or against any defendant, except in the cases just mentioned and in cases in which the defendant who is the husband or wife of the witness tendered can give evidence (p) or husband

evidence for prosecution

776 The wife or husband of a defendant is a competent and compellable witness either for the prosecution or for the defence on the trial of indictments relating to the non-repair of highways etc (q)

The wife or husband of a person charged with certain offences (r) may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or for the defence and without the consent of the person charged (a)

The effect of this enactment does not seem to be to make the wife or husband of the party charged with the specified offences a compellable witness either for the prosecution or for the defence (b)

(n) R v Sergeant (1826), Ry & M, per ARBOLL, C J, at p 514

(o) For the statutory modifications of the common law rule see infra

(p) See p 102, ante, R v Loder (1804), 5 Esp 107, R v Williams (1836), 8 C & P 264 R v Thompson (1863), 3 F & F 821. In R v Pamerter (1872), 12 Cox, C C 177, KIRLEY, C B, refused to admit as evidence against a defendant a letter written by him to his wife while he was in custody and detained by a constable to whom the defendant had given it to post. The ground of the rejection of this letter was that it belonged to the wife, and that she could not have been called upon to produce it, if it had reached her hands. This ruling would be inapplicable now in those cases where the wife or husband of a defendant is a compellable witness (see infra) but would be applicable to all cases where the wife or husband is not compellable

The offences are the offences under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 84), of a man neglecting to maintain or deserting his wife or any of his family, any offence under the Married Women's Property Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 75), ss 12, 16, under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 27 (exposing children) s 18 (rape), ss 53, 54, 55 (abduction of women and girls), or s 56 (child stealing), any offence against a person under sixteen under the Offences against the Person Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 5 (manslaughter), s 42 (common assault), s 43 (aggravated assault), s 52 (indecent assault etc), or s 62 (attempt to commit an infamous crime) any offence under the Dangerous Perforances Acts, 1879 and 1887 (42 & 43 Vict c 34, 60 & 61 Vict c 52), and any other offence involving bodily injury to a person under sixteen (see Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), Sched I, and s 27), any offence under the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67) Part II (see p 408, post)

(b) In R v Lillie (1899) 31 L J 646, and R v Dunning (1899) 34 L J 33 (charges under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69)), the wife was treated as a compellable witness, in R v Brazil (1899), 63 J P 136 (a charge under the same Act), the wife objected to give evidence against her husband, and her objection was allowed. It is immaterial whether the marriage has taken place before or after the offence charged (R v Brazil, supra)

777 In any proceeding against any person under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (c), the wife or husband of the person accused may be required to attend as an ordinary witness in the case, and is competent, but not compellable, to give evidence—i.e., it seems either for the prosecution or for the defence (d).

778 It is further provided by statute (e) that in all criminal proceedings (f) the wife or husband of every person charged with an offence is a competent witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings, but cannot, except in certain specified cases (g), be called as a witness, except upon the application of the person charged who is the husband or wife of the proposed witness (h).

The provisions of the statute do not render a husband compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage or a wife compellable to disclose a communication so made to her by her husband (i).

A husband or wife who gives evidence under the provisions of the statute may be cross-examined as to his or her previous offences or as to his or her character (k).

The failure of the wife or husband of the person charged to give evidence must not, any more than the failure of the person charged to give evidence, be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution (l).

(d) The words "may be required to attend to give evidence as an ordinary witness in the case" seem to contemplate the wife or husband giving evidence for the prosecution. The effect seems to be to alter, in respect of the offences in question, s 1 (c) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), and to make it possible to call the wife or husband of the defendant without the application of the defendant, but the other words of the section give the witness the option of refusing to give evidence. It seems that s 12 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), cannot justify the binding over of the wife or husband by recognisance to give evidence, as that is a species of compulsion. Quære, whether the words quoted above refer to the process by subpoena. The Act seems to provide for the wife or husband giving evidence for the defence, but this would appear to have been unnecessary, as it was already provided for by the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), s 1 (see infra).

(e) Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36).

(f) Nothing in the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), is to affect the Evidence Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 14), see p 406, ante.

(h) Ibid, s 1. The effect of the exception is that a co-defendant cannot call the wife or husband of another co-defendant as a witness, unless the husband or wife who is a co-defendant applies that his or her wife or husband should be called. The object of the exception is to prevent a wife or husband giving, without the husband or wife's consent, evidence which may have the effect of inculcating the husband or wife. It seems that, if the wife or husband of a co-defendant is called as a witness and gives evidence adverse to another co-defendant, such co-defendant has the right to cross-examine the person so called (R v Hadwen, [1902] 1 K B 882, C C B.).

(i) Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c 36), s 1 (d).

(k) The provisions of the Act which prohibit, with certain reservations, cross-examination as to previous offences, or as to character apply only to the person charged (ibid, s 1 (e), (f)).

SUB-SECT 4—Evidence of Children

779 In criminal proceedings there is a limited class of cases in which a witness can give evidence not on oath or affirmation

In a charge for certain offences under the Children Act, 1908 (m), if the child in respect of whom the offence is charged to have been committed, or any other child of tender years who is tendered as a witness, does not in the opinion of the court or justices understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such child may be received, though not given upon oath, if in the opinion of the court or justices such child is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence and understands the duty of speaking the truth, but no person can be convicted on such unsworn evidence, unless it is corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused (n)

There are similar provisions as to the taking of unsworn evidence when a person is charged with an offence under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (o)

SUB-SECT 5—Evidence of Accomplices

780 There is no absolute rule of law that the evidence of an accomplice must be corroborated, but there is a well established rule of practice by which judges advise juries not to convict a prisoner, except in very special circumstances, on such evidence, when uncorroborated (p)

When a person above sixteen is convicted of murder or treason, judgment of death must be pronounced, but in cases of piracy and setting fire to the King's ships it may be merely recorded (g)

As regards all sentences of penal servitude authorised by any Act before 5th August, 1891, the court may award a sentence of penal servitude for any period not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or any longer period fixed by the particular Act. An alternative sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years may be passed instead of penal servitude, when penal servitude is authorised by any Act, unless there is provision to the contrary in any Act passed after 5th August, 1891 (m)

Imprisonment
without hard labour

783 Imprisonment without hard labour (with or without a fine) is the common law punishment for a common law misdemeanour, and is a statutory punishment for some kinds of felony or misdemeanour

Where imprisonment is a punishment allowable by common law, there is no limit fixed for the period of imprisonment (n)

In most cases where imprisonment without hard labour is allowable by statute the maximum period of imprisonment is for two years (a)

Persons who are sentenced to imprisonment without hard labour may be divided into three divisions. The court that passes the sentence may, if it thinks fit, having regard to the nature of the offence and the antecedents of the offender, direct that he be treated as an offender of the first division or as an offender of the second division, if no direction is given by the court, he is to be treated as an offender of the third division (b)

With hard

784 Imprisonment with hard labour is a punishment which can only be imposed when authorised by statute (c). The maximum period is generally two years (d)

(a) See Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69) s 1. A sentence of three years' imprisonment without hard labour may, it seems still be passed e.g. for a second conviction for blasphemy (stat (1897-8) 9 Will 3, c 35), a sentence of three years' imprisonment with or without hard labour may also be passed for threatening to publish a libel with intent to extort money (Libel Act, 1813 (6 & 7 Vict c 96), s 3). If a statute authorises imprisonment, but does not specify any term there is no limit to the period

A sentence of hard labour concurrent with a sentence of penal servitude is undesirable, as the sentence of hard labour makes it more difficult for the prisoner to earn a remission of his sentence of penal servitude (R v Martin (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 209). But if a person who has been sentenced to penal servitude is released on ticket-of-leave and is afterwards convicted of another crime, he must serve the rest of his original sentence after the expiration of the second and the remnant of the original sentence cannot be made to run concurrently with the new one (R v King, [1897] 1 Q B 211 C C R, per HAWKINS, J, at p 218, R v Hamilton (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 87). 789 If a defendant has been convicted on indictment for causing a nuisance, an order may be made by the court for the abatement of the nuisance, if it is alleged to be a continuing nuisance and is proved to be still continuing at the date of the judgment (n).

SUB-SECT 2.—Recognisances to keep the Peace

790 A person who has been convicted of any felony (except murder) under the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts (o) may be ordered, in addition to any other punishment, to enter into his own recognisances, with or without sureties, to keep the peace, and on failure to find sureties may be imprisoned for not more than a year (c).

A person who has been convicted of any indictable misdemeanour under the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts (o) may, in addition to or in substitution for any other punishment, be ordered to enter into his own recognisances and to find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, and on failure to find sureties may be imprisoned for not more than a year (p).

Some of the statutes which authorise the imposition of a fine fix a maximum limit, e.g., the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict c 109), the Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo 2, c 36), s 2, and the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), ss 9 and 12. If the conditions of such recognisances are broken, the recognisances may be estreated (r).

In the case of any offence except one punishable by death the court may, instead of passing sentence, require a person who has been convicted to enter into recognisances, with or without sureties, to come up for judgment when called upon. Such recognisances may also contain a condition that the convicted person should in the meantime keep the peace and be of good behaviour (s).

General

791 When any person has been convicted on indictment of any offence punishable with imprisonment, and the court is of opinion that, having regard to the character, antecedents, age, health or mental condition of the person charged, or to the trivial nature of the offence, or to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed, it is inexpedient to inflict any punishment or any other than a nominal punishment, or that it is expedient to release the offender on probation, the court may, in lieu of imposing a sentence of imprisonment, make an order discharging the offender conditionally on his entering into a recognisance, with or without sureties, to be of good behaviour, and to appear for sentence when called on at any time during such period not exceeding three years, as may be specified in the order (a). The court may also order the offender to pay such damages for injury or compensation for loss and to pay such costs of the proceedings as the court thinks reasonable (b).

Where an offender is ordered by the court to enter into such recognisances, they may contain a condition that the offender is to be under the supervision of a person named in the order for a period therein specified and such other conditions for securing such supervision as may be specified in the order.

Conditions.

There may also be inserted in such a recognisance additional conditions (1) prohibiting the offender from associating with thieves and other undesirable persons and from frequenting undesirable places, or (2), where the offence was committed under the influence of drink, requiring the offender to abstain from intoxicating liquor (c), and (3) generally for securing that the offender should lead an honest and industrious life (d).

SECT 1

Punishment in General

Security of the peace

792 If a person has just cause to fear that another will do him some bodily harm, as by killing or beating him or his wife or child, he may demand the surety of the peace against such person, and it is the duty of a justice of the peace to bind over such person, if the applicant proves on oath that he is actually under such fear and has just cause to be so (e)

Binding a person over to keep the peace is not in strictness a punishment, but is a measure taken to prevent the apprehended danger of a breach of the peace

Proceedings for this purpose are generally taken before justices, but an application may also be made by exhibiting articles of the peace in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice (f)

Good behaviour

793 A person may also be bound over by justices or by the High Court of Justice to be of good behaviour, and this may be done by the justices of their own motion or on the complaint of others. A recognisance to be of good behaviour is more comprehensive than a recognisance to keep the peace, and a person may be bound over to be of good behaviour, to prevent an apprehended offence, it is not necessary in such a case for the applicant to swear that he goes in fear of the person against whom the application is made (g)

Forfeiture of recognisances

794 If anyone fails to satisfy the condition of a recognisance, it may be estreated (h) The effect of the estreat is that the sheriff enforces the forfeiture by levying the amount of the recognisance on the goods and chattels of the recognisor, and if sufficient goods and chattels cannot be found, by seizing his body (i)

The court may also discharge or enlarge a recognisance (u).

SUB-SECT 3 — Police Supervision

Notification of residence

795 A person who has been sentenced to police supervision, and is at large in Great Britain or Ireland, must notify the place of his residence to the chief officer of police of the district in which his residence is situated, and whenever he removes to another residence within the same police district, must notify his change of residence to such chief officer, and if he is about to leave a police district, he must notify his intention to the chief officer of police of that district and must state the place to Punishment in General

Every male person subject to such supervision is once in every month to report himself, at such time as may be prescribed by the chief officer of police of the district in which he may be, either to the chief officer himself or to such other person as the chief officer may direct. The report may be made personally or by letter (b)

Reports,

Any person subject to the supervision of the police who fails to comply with these provisions is guilty of an offence (b), and unless he proves either that being on a journey he tarried no longer in the place where it was necessary to notify his place of residence than was reasonably necessary, or that he did his best to act in conformity with the law, he is liable, on conviction therefor by a court of summary jurisdiction, to a sentence of imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than one year (c)

796 A person convicted on an indictment charging him with one of certain specified crimes (e) and also with being a habitual criminal may be sentenced to preventive detention as an additional punishment (f)

Habitual

A habitual criminal for the purposes of the statute means a person who, after attaining the age of sixteen, has been proved to have been at least three times convicted of one of the specified crimes previously to the conviction for the crime charged in the indictment, and to be leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life, or a person who on such a previous conviction has been found to be a habitual criminal and sentenced to preventive detention (g)

Power of Secretary of State

798 If any person has been sentenced (i) to a term of penal servitude of not less than five years, the Secretary of State may, if such person appears to him to have been a habitual criminal, at any time after the expiration of three years of the term to which he has been sentenced commute the whole or part of the residue of the term to a sentence of preventive detention, but the total term of the sentence when so commuted must in that case not exceed the term of penal servitude originally awarded (j).

Effect of
preventive detention

When a sentence of preventive detention is added to a sentence of penal servitude, the sentence of preventive detention is to take effect immediately on the determination of the sentence of penal servitude, whether the sentence of penal servitude is determined by effluxion of time or at an earlier date by order of the Secretary of State (k).

The Secretary of State in making such order may have regard to which the accused has been previously convicted may be either committed before or after the passing of the Act (21st December, 1908). The indictment is sufficient if after charging the crime it states that the offender is a habitual criminal (ibid, s 10 (2), (3)). A charge of being a habitual criminal cannot be inserted in an indictment without the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions, and unless not less than seven days' notice has been given to the proper officer of the court by which the offender is to be tried and to the offender that it is intended to insert such charge, the notice to the offender must specify the previous convictions and the other grounds upon which it is intended to found the charge (ibid, s 10 (4)). The offender is to be arraigned on the indictment in the same way as a person who is arraigned on an indictment which contains a count for a previous conviction (see pp 353, 371, ante), sc, he is not to be arraigned on the part of the indictment charging him with being a habitual criminal until after he has pleaded guilty to the charge or the jury have found him guilty of the crime charged (ibid, s 10 (4)). Evidence as to character and repute may, if the court think fit, be admitted on the question whether the accused is or is not leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life, the accused may tender evidence as to his character and repute (ibid, s 10 (5)). The persistent leading of a dishonest or criminal life must be proved and is a more important part of the definition of a habitual criminal than the previous convictions (R v Raybould (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 191. Quare, whether a conviction on three indictments found by the same grand jury amounts to three convictions within the meaning of s. 10 (2) (R v Raybould, supra)).

Persons undergoing such detention are to be subjected to such disciplinary and reformatory influences and are to be employed on such work as may be best fitted to make them able and willing to earn an honest livelihood on discharge (o)

SUB-SECT. 2—Habitual Drunkards

800 If a person is convicted on indictment of an offence punishable with imprisonment or penal servitude, and the court is satisfied from the evidence that the offence was committed under the influence of drink or that drunkenness was a contributing cause of the offence, and the offender admits that he is, or is found by the jury to be, a habitual drunkard, the court may, in addition to or in substitution for any other sentence, order that he be detained for a term not exceeding three years in any State inebriate reformatory or in any certified inebriate reformatory the managers of which are willing to receive him (p)

A similar order may be made (y), on the certificate of a court of summary jurisdiction, that an alien (1) has within three months been in the receipt of such parochial relief as disqualifies a person for the parliamentary franchise, or (2) has been found wandering without ostensible means of subsistence, or (3) has been living under insanitary conditions due to overcrowding, or (4), if he has entered England after 11th August, 1905, that he has been sentenced in a foreign country for an extradition crime (a)

institution

803 A youthful offender sentenced to detention in a reformatory school (d) who has been convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction of the offence of committing a breach of the rules of the school or of inciting to such breach or of escaping from such a school, and is liable to be sentenced to imprisonment for any such offence, may be sentenced to detention in a Borstal institution instead of imprisonment (e).

804 If a person being within the limits of age within which persons may be detained in a Borstal institution is undergoing a sentence of penal servitude or imprisonment passed either before or after December 21 1908, and the Secretary of State is satisfied that such person may with advantage be detained in a Borstal institution, the Secretary of State may authorise the Prison Commissioners to transfer him from prison to such an institution to serve there the whole or any part of the unexpired residue of his sentence, if he is whole or any part of any land or building vested in them or under their control; expenses incurred for this purpose are to be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament (ibid). The Secretary of State may make rules for the management of any such institution and for the temporary detention of young offenders, and subject to such regulations the Prison Acts, 1865 to 1898 (28 & 29 Vict c 126, 31 & 32 Vict c 21, 40 & 41 Vict c 21, 41 & 42 Vict c 63, 47 & 48 Vict c 51, 49 & 50 Vict c 9, 56 & 57 Vict c 26), and their penal provisions and the rules thereunder are to apply to every such institution as if it were a prison (ibid).

(c) Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 59), s 1. Before passing such sentence the court is to consider any report which may be made to it by or on behalf of the Prison Commissioners as to the suitability of the case for such treatment, and must be satisfied that the character, state of health and mental condition of the offender are such that he is likely to profit by such treatment (ibid, s 1(1)). The Secretary of State may make an order extending the application of s 1 of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 59), to persons apparently under such age, not exceeding twenty-three, as may be specified in the order (ibid, s 1(2)), the order is not to be made until a draft of it has lain before each House of Parliament for not less than thirty days during the session of Parliament and neither House before the expiration of that period has presented an address to the King against the draft or any part of it if such address is presented, a new draft order may be made (ibid, s 1(2)). See R v Kirkpatrick (1908), 73 J P 29, C C A.

(e) Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c 59), s 2. The minimum and maximum term in such a case is the same as under s 1 (see ante). In such a case the sentence of detention in a Borstal institution supercedes the sentence of detention in a reformatory school (ibid, s 2).

805 Subject to regulations by the Secretary of State, the Prison Commissioners may at any time after the expiration of six months (or three months if the person is a female) from the commencement of the period of detention discharge by licence a person detained in a Borstal institution on condition that he is placed under the supervision or authority of any society or person named in the licence who is willing to take charge of him (g).

Every person sentenced to detention in a Borstal institution must on the expiration of the term of his sentence remain for a further period of six months under the supervision of the Prison Commissioners (h).

806 If the visiting committee of a Borstal institution reports to the Secretary of State that a person detained there is incorrigible or is exercising a bad influence on the other inmates, the Secretary of State may commute the unexpired residue of the term of detention to such term of imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding the unexpired residue, as the Secretary of State may determine (i).

A person sentenced to detention in a Borstal institution in one part of the United Kingdom may be removed to and detained in a Borstal institution in another part (k).

SUB SECT 5 — Youthful Offenders

807 The law relating to the punishment of persons under sixteen years of age is of an exceptional character (l).

Neither a sentence of death nor a sentence of penal servitude can be passed on a person under sixteen years of age (m).

A child under fourteen cannot be imprisoned at all (n), and a young person (i.e., a person of fourteen years and upwards and under the age of sixteen) can only be imprisoned in exceptional cases (o).

The conviction of a child or young person is not to be regarded

SMO 2.

Punishment of Special Classes of Offenders

Punishments which can be awarded to persons under sixteen.

808 The punishments which can be awarded in the case of a person under sixteen are as follows (1) the offender may, according to the nature of the offence which he has committed, be detained in a place of detention or in an industrial or reformatory school or may be whipped, and if of the age of fourteen years or upwards may be fined or in exceptional cases (q) be imprisoned, (2) he may be discharged on his entering into a recognisance or placed under the supervision of a probation officer, or (3) the parent or guardian of the offender may be ordered to be fined or to give security for the good behaviour of the offender (r)

809 A person under sixteen convicted of an offence for which the punishment is death in the case of an adult must be sentenced to be detained during the King's pleasure, and when so sentenced is liable to be detained in such place and under such conditions as the Secretary of State may direct (s).

Detention during the King's pleasure.

810 If a person under sixteen is convicted of manslaughter or an attempt to murder or of wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, and the court is of opinion that no punishment which it is authorised to inflict under the provisions of the Children Act, 1908, is sufficient (u), the court may sentence the offender to be detained for such period as may be specified in the sentence, a person on whom such a sentence has been passed is, during the specified period, liable to be detained in such place and on such conditions as the Secretary of State may direct (b)

Detention for specified period in such place as Secretary of State may direct.

811 Where a person under sixteen is convicted of an offence punishable in the case of an adult with penal servitude or imprisonment, or would, if he were an adult, be liable to be imprisoned on default of payment of any fine, damages, or costs, and the court considers that none of the other methods in which the case may legally be dealt with is suitable, the court may order that he be committed to

814 A person between fourteen and sixteen may be sentenced to imprisonment, if the court before which he is tried certifies that he is of so unruly a character that he cannot be detained in a place of detention provided under the Children Act, 1908 (g), or that he is of so depraved a character that he is not a fit person to be so detained (h). In no other case may a person under sixteen be sentenced to imprisonment after the 31st December, 1909 (i)

(c) The place of detention is to be one provided under the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 106

(d) Ibid. It is the duty of the London County Council in the metropolitan police district and the council of a county borough in a county borough and the standing joint committee of a county in a county, to provide such places of detention for every petty sessional division within their district as may be required for the reception of persons ordered to be detained under the Act, either by arranging with the occupiers of any premises within or without their district for the use of those premises for the purpose or by themselves establishing or joining with another police authority in establishing such places. The same place of detention may be provided for two or more petty sessional divisions (ibid, s 108 (1), (11)). The provisions of the Act which prohibit or restrict imprisonment (s 102 (1) (3)), and which impose the obligation to provide places of detention, do not become operative until the 1st January, 1910, but places of detention may be provided at any time after the passing of the Act (s 21st December, 1908) (ibid, s 108 (10)), and persons under sixteen may be committed to such places if they are provided, and if the proceedings against such persons are commenced on and after the 1st April, 1909 (ss 112, 113)

(e) Ibid, s 57 (1). The period of detention in a reformatory school is for not less than three and not more than five years, but is not in any case to extend beyond the time when the offender will, in the opinion of the court, attain the age of nineteen (ibid, s 65 (a))

(f) Ibid, s 58 (2). The child is to be sent to an industrial school for such a period as the court thinks proper for his teaching and training, but such period is not to extend beyond the time when the child will, in the opinion of the court, attain the age of sixteen (ibid, s 65 (b))

A male person under sixteen may also be sentenced to be whipped for certain offences under the Larceny Act, 1861 (l), the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (m), the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (n), and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (o)

Where a youthful offender of the age of twelve years and upwards, but under sixteen, is sent to a certified reformatory school, he may also, it seems, be sentenced to be whipped, if the offence which he has committed is one in respect of which the punishment of whipping may be inflicted (p)

It seems that if a person under sixteen is sentenced to detention for an offence (q) for which whipping may be ordered, a sentence of whipping may be added to such sentence (r)

(m) 24 & 25 Vict c 100 Such offences are injuring or attempting to injure persons by explosive or corrosive substances (ss 28-30), unlawfully and maliciously putting things on a railway etc with intent to endanger the safety of railway passengers (s 32) The Larceny Act, 1861 (s 119), the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (s 70), and the Malicious Damage Act 1861 (s 75), provide that whenever whipping is awarded under each of these Acts the offender is to be once privately whipped, and the number of strokes and the instrument with which they are to be inflicted must be specified by the court in the sentence Whipping can also be inflicted for certain offences dealt with by a court of summary jurisdiction under the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 10

of Special

Fine etc.

816 If a person under sixteen is charged with any offence for which a fine, damages, or costs may be imposed (s), and the court thinks that the case would be best met by the imposition of a fine, damages, or costs, whether with or without any other punishment, the court may, and if the person is under fourteen, must, order that the fine, damages, or costs be paid by the parent or guardian of such person instead of by such person, unless the court is satisfied that the parent or guardian cannot be found or that he has not conduced to the commission of the offence by neglecting to exercise due care of such person (t)

The court may make the same order in the case of a young person (of fourteen years and upwards, but under sixteen) or may order the young person to pay the fine etc (a)

Security for good behaviour.

817 The court may, when a child or young person is charged with any offence, order his parent or guardian to give security for his good behaviour (b)

The orders just mentioned may be made against a parent or guardian who has been required to attend at the court and has failed to attend (c), but subject to this exception no such order is to be made without giving the parent or guardian an opportunity of being heard (d)

As regards children under fourteen, restricts it to exceptional cases as regards persons over fourteen and under sixteen (ibid, s 102), and allows a sentence of detention in a place of detention to be substituted for penal servitude and imprisonment (see p 421, ante) The point referred to in the text is somewhat obscure owing to the ambiguous language of s 107, which contains an enumeration of the "methods of dealing with young persons charged with offences", these methods are all set out in the alternative, but it is submitted that the section does not prohibit the infliction of more than one of the alternative punishments in any one case, if under any statute in force at the time of the passing of the Act more than one of the alternative punishments or of the punishments for which the Act provides a substitute could be inflicted. It is submitted that the intention of s 107 of the Act is only to give an enumeration of the different methods of dealing with young persons charged with offences, and that the Act is not intended to affect the provisions of those Acts which specifically deal with young persons, except by substituting detention for penal servitude and imprisonment, and see s 99 of the Act, which contemplates the infliction of more than one punishment.

(c) See ibid, s 98, as to requiring the attendance of a parent or guardian at a court before which a child or young person charged with an offence is brought.

818. A person under sixteen who has been convicted on indictment may, like an adult person, be ordered to enter into recognisances, with or without sureties, to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, and such recognisances may be in addition to or in substitution for any other punishment

SECT 3.—Principles that determine the Amount of Punishment

819 In all crimes except those for which the sentence of death must be pronounced (f) a very wide discretion in the matter of fixing the degree of punishment is allowed to the judge who tries the case

Discretion of court as to punishment

The policy of the law is as regards most crimes to fix a maximum penalty, which is only intended for the worst cases (g), and to leave to the discretion of the judge to determine to what extent in a particular case the punishment awarded should approach to or recede from the maximum limit. The exercise of this discretion is a matter of prudence and not of law, but an appeal lies by the leave of the Court of Criminal Appeal against any sentence, and if leave is given, the sentence can be altered by that court (h).

In carrying out the task of reviewing sentences the Court of Criminal Appeal will, it seems, be guided by the general principles that govern the awarding of punishment and by the practice of criminal courts, and will apply these principles and this practice to the circumstances of each case (i).

820 The object of punishment is the prevention of crime, and every punishment should have a double effect, namely, to prevent the person who has committed a crime from repeating the act or omission and to prevent other members of the community from committing similar crimes (k).

Object of
punishment

As regards the particular offender there are three ways of

(c) See p 421, ante, and Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 17), s 1 (2). As to sending children to industrial schools and the removal of children and young persons from the custody of criminal parents, see titles EDUCATION, INFANTS AND CHILDREN

(h) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), see p 432, post. Before the passing of this Act the discretion of a judge in sentencing a prisoner was not subject to review by any judicial tribunal, and the punishment ordered if justified by law, could only be modified by the Crown exercising the prerogative of mercy on the advice of the Home Secretary.

(i) See p. 435, post

(k) 4 Bl Com 11, Bentham, Rationale of Punishment, p 19. "The prevention of offences divides itself into two branches - particular prevention, which applies to the delinquent himself, and general prevention, which is providing by punishment against the recurrence of an offence (1) by taking from him the power of offending (incapacitation), (2) by taking away the desire of offending (reformation), (3) by making him afraid of offending (intimidation) (l)

In some cases, besides providing for the prevention of crimes in future, punishment may also include reparation for the past injury by ordering the offender to compensate the person injured (m)

As regards other members of the community who are disposed to commit similar offences, the only way of providing by punishment against the commission of the offence is by the terror which the punishment of an individual produces in others

of principles

821 Thus, if a crime has been committed which is of a kind calculated to inspire great alarm, as manifesting a very mischievous disposition, or is specially rife in a particular district or throughout the country, it may be necessary to award a very severe punishment and to take away from the offender the power of committing such a crime or any crime for a long period (n) If the crime is less dangerous, and the offender may be allowed to return to society after a shorter period of detention, the punishment should possess qualities calculated to reform or to intimidate him (o), or if there are exceptional circumstances, punishment may be respited and the offender may be given a chance of leading an applicable to all the members of the community " See also p 20 "General prevention ought to be the chief end of punishment, as it is its real justification If we could consider an offence which has been committed as an isolated fact, the like of which would never recur, punishment would be useless

But when we consider that an unpunished crime leaves the path open not only to the same delinquent, but also to those who may have the same motives and opportunities for entering upon it, we perceive that the punishment inflicted on the individual becomes a source of security to all Punishment is elevated to the first rank of benefits, when it is regarded not as an act of wrath or vengeance against a guilty or unfortunate individual who has given way to mischievous inclinations, but as an indispensable sacrifice to the common safety "

(m) For an example of this, see Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c. 23), ss 4, 15, p 449, post A criminal court may make an order for the restitution of property on a conviction for larceny of a similar offence (see p 684, post)

(n) Ex , by sentencing him to a long period of penal servitude and by awarding, where it is possible, an exceptional punishment, such as flogging (see the Garretts Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict c. 44), s 1) See, too, R v Spencer (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 37, where the Court of Criminal Appeal refused to interfere with a sentence of twelve years' penal servitude passed on a burglar although it was his first conviction and although he had previously borne a good character, but in that case the prisoner, though he had ample means to lead a honest life, was found with a full equipment for committing burglaries, and the marks on fifteen houses in the neighbourhood which had been burglariously entered were marks that might have been made by a jemmy found in his possession, and the neighbourhood had been so terrorised by burglaries that ninety policeman had had to patrol the district, see also R v Boyd (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 64, where it was held that an "epidemic" of burglaries in a neighbourhood might be taken into account in fixing the sentence on a burglar. honest life under a condition that if he does not do so he will be subjected to punishment (p)

822 The court, in fixing the punishment for any particular crime, will take into consideration the nature of the offence, the circumstances in which it was committed, the degree of deliberation shown by the offender, the provocation which he has received, if the crime is one of violence, the antecedents of the prisoner up to the time of sentence, his age and character, and, except in the case of habitual criminals, any recommendation to mercy which the jury may have made (q).

The previous good character of a prisoner may be a reason for inflicting a light or nominal sentence upon him, especially when he has been in employment and his employer is willing to take him back (R v Francis (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 259). But good character is not to be taken into consideration, when by means of good character a person has obtained an opportunity for committing the offence charged (R v Sidlow (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 28). So in considering the punishment to be passed on persons in positions of trust for misappropriation of money or other property good character has little weight, and is often an aggravating circumstance (see R v Soper (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 73). A crime by a person in a position of trust who abuses the trust imposed upon him is punished with greater severity than a crime by a person who stands in no fiduciary or confidential relation to the person injured (R v Sidlow supra, R v Soper, supra).

In larceny and similar crimes the value of the property stolen may be a matter to be considered, for if a person were punished with the same severity for stealing a thing of small value as for stealing a thing of great value, a dishonest person would always prefer committing a theft on a large scale (Bentham, Rationale, 36, 41, R v Nuttall (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 180, R v Morton (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 145). But there are many cases where the severity of the punishment does not depend on the value of the property stolen, as where a prisoner is convicted of stealing something of small value, but the crime which is brought home to him is only one of a series of similar offences (R v Maurice (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 176, where a sentence of five years' penal servitude for stealing one penny was upheld by the Court of Criminal Appeal, but the prisoner had been guilty of systematic frauds extending over a long period, and the sentence was supported as a means of keeping her out of mischief, and see R v Rens (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 83, where a sentence of penal servitude for a trifling theft by a person who had been convicted several times before for crimes arising out of drink was upheld as the only means of reclaiming her). It is the practice of criminal courts before passing sentence to inquire into the antecedents of a prisoner and to punish habitual offenders more severely than those who have not been previously convicted or have not committed other crimes (R v Weaver (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 12). But it is not right to be guided merely by previous convictions, and if the offence for which punishment is to be awarded does not indicate a deliberate return to crime, and there are circumstances which do not show that the offence was planned beforehand, less weight is to be given to previous offences (R v Nuttall (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 180). Forfeiture of office etc by person convicted of felony.

SECT 4—Disqualifications following on Conviction.

SUB-SECT 1—Forfeiture of Office

823 If a person convicted of treason or felony holds any military or naval office or any civil office under the Crown, or other public employment, or any ecclesiastical benefice, or any place, office, or emolument in any university, college, or other corporation, or is entitled to any pension or superannuation allowance payable by the public or out of any public fund, and is sentenced to death or penal servitude or any term of imprisonment with hard labour, or a term of imprisonment without hard labour exceeding twelve months, such office, benefice, employment or place forthwith becomes vacant, and the pension or superannuation allowance or emolument forthwith determines and ceases to be payable, unless such person receives a free pardon from the King within two months of his conviction or before the filling up of such office etc (r)

weight should be given to previous convictions for offences of the same character as that for which the offender is to be punished than to convictions for offences of a different character (R v Boucher (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 177) And a first offender may commit an offence of such malignity that a severe sentence should be imposed, and the absence of previous convictions may be disregarded as only showing that the offender has not been found out before (see R v Spencer (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 37)

If a person has been convicted of a crime and there are other charges hanging over him in respect of which he has not been indicted, the judge in passing sentence should, if the prisoner consents, take the other charges into account, and in such a case it is not usual to proceed with these other charges. If such charges are not taken into account and the prisoner is subsequently convicted in respect of any of them, the sentence already inflicted on the prisoner in respect of the earlier charge is a ground for a mitigation of the sentence for the later one (R v Sykes (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 172, R v Hawes (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 42, R v Marham (1909) 2 Cr App Rep 160, R v Alcorn (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 152, R v Taylor (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 158)

The fact that a person committed a crime when in a state of drunkenness may be a mitigating circumstance as negativing deliberateness of intention (R v Nuttall (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 180, R v Morton (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 255, R v Holden (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 148, R v Meade (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 54, and see p 242, ante), but drunkenness is put forward by prisoners too frequently as an excuse for crime to be deserving of much consideration, and may be a ground for passing such a sentence as will debar the prisoner for some time from the use of intoxicating liquors (R v Rees (1906), 1 Cr App Rep 83)

A long period of detention is often justifiable with the object of incapacitating an offender from committing crimes for a considerable period or of reclaiming him (R v Maurer, supra, R v Rees, supra), and even in the case of those who are not hardened criminals it may be justifiable and desirable to impose a sentence of sufficient length to enable the offender to undergo a special treatment (e.g., the Borstal system) (R v Kirkpatrick (1908), 73 J P 29, C C A 3)

In cases where personal injuries are inflicted the amount of provocation that the prisoner received is a matter to be taken into account in fixing the sentence (R v O'Connell (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 11)

For some offences, e.g., manslaughter or wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, it is impossible to lay down any standard as to what is the proper punishment, the question depends on the circumstances of each particular case (R v Gorman (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 187)

824 Such person on his conviction becomes, and until he has suffered the punishment allotted or any punishment lawfully substituted, or until he receives a free pardon, continues to be incapable of holding any such office, employment, or benefice or of being elected or sitting or voting as a member of either House of Parliament, or of exercising any right of suffrage or other parliamentary or municipal franchise whatever within England, Wales, or Ireland (s)

Incapacity of person convicted of felony

825 A convict (i.e., a person against whom judgment of death or of penal servitude has been pronounced or recorded by any court of competent jurisdiction in England, Wales, or Ireland upon any charge of treason or felony) cannot bring an action for the recovery of any property, debt, or damage while he is subject to the operation of the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (t), and cannot alienate or charge any property or make any contract (u)

SUB-SECT. 2 — Appointment of Administrator of Convict's Property

826 The King, or any person in that behalf authorised by the King under the royal sign manual, may by writing commit the custody and management of the property of any such convict to an administrator. Such appointment may be revoked or may be determined by death, and thereupon a new administrator may be appointed (v). On the appointment of any such administrator all the real and personal property, including choses in action, to which the convict was entitled at the time of his conviction, or to which he may be entitled after his conviction, vests in the administrator for all the estate and interest of the convict therein (x). The administrator has absolute power to let, mortgage, sell, and transfer any part of the convict's property (y). He may pay out of the convict's property all costs and expenses which the convict may have been condemned to pay and all costs, charges, and expenses incurred by the convict in and about his defence, and all costs, charges, and expenses which the administrator may incur in carrying out his duties with reference to such property or to any claims made against it (z). He may also pay or satisfy any debt or liability of the convict which may be established in due course of law or may otherwise be proved to his satisfaction, and may also cause any property which may come to his hands to be delivered to any person claiming to be justly entitled to it, if the right of such person is established in due course of law or otherwise proved to the satisfaction of the administrator (a).

Disqualifications following on Conviction

Compensation to person injured by criminal or fraudulent act of convict

He may make compensation for any loss of property or other injury alleged to have been suffered by any person through or by means of any alleged criminal or fraudulent act of the convict, although no proof of such alleged criminal or fraudulent act may have been made in any court (b), and may make such allowances as he may think fit for the support of the convict's wife or child or any relative dependent on the convict for support, or of the convict himself, if he is at large under licence (c).

The exercise by the administrator of the powers conferred upon him is binding upon, and is not to be questioned by, the convict or by any person claiming an interest in the convict's property (d).

Revesting of convict's property in convict

827 Subject to the exercise of the powers conferred on the administrator, the convict's property is to be preserved and held in trust by the administrator and is to revert in the convict, should his disability be removed, or in his heirs or legal personal representatives, or such other persons as may be lawfully entitled to such property, and the powers given to the administrator are thereupon to determine (e).

Interim curator of convict's property

828 If no administrator is appointed, an interim curator of the property of the convict may be appointed by any justices in petty sessions or by any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place where the convict before his conviction had his last usual residence, the powers of the interim curator are similar to those of the administrator (f).

Every administrator and interim curator is to be accountable to the convict for all property which has been possessed or received by the administrator etc and not duly administered (g).

Property acquired by a convict while he is lawfully at large under a licence does not vest in the administrator or interim curator (h).

Disqualifications on conviction

A person convicted of felony is for ever disqualified from selling beer and cider or wine or spirits by retail (Beerhouse Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 61), s 7, Wine and Beerhouse Amendment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 29), s 14, Refreshment Houses Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict c 27), s 22). A person convicted of felony cannot serve as parish constable (Parish Constables Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 109), s 7). A person convicted of a crime and sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour or any greater punishment cannot for five years from his sentence be a parish or district councillor or a guardian of the poor (Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict c 73), s 46 (1)(c)). No person convicted of felony, fraud, or perjury can hold any parish office or have the management of the poor in any way whatever (Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834

Such disqualifications, so far as they create any incapacity, are removed if the offender receives a free pardon (i)

It is not clear whether the endurance of punishment has, as regards the removal of disqualifications, the same effect as a pardon (k)

SUB-SECT. 3.—Outlawry

830 Outlawry in criminal proceedings is a process issued against a person with regard to whom an indictment has been found by a grand jury, and who does not appear to plead to the indictment, or after pleading does not appear to receive sentence, and whose apprehension cannot be effected before the judgment in outlawry is pronounced (l)

(j) See Hay v Tower Division of London Justices (1889), 21 Q B D 561

(k) If an offender has been convicted of any felony not punishable with death and has endured the punishment awarded, the endurance of punishment has the same effects and consequences as a pardon under the Great Seal (Civil Rights of Convicts Act, 1828 (9 Geo 4, c 32), s 3) There is some doubt as to whether the endurance of punishment removes the incapacity to hold a retail spirit licence under the Wine and Beerhouse Amendment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 29), s 14, and similar incapacities In R v Vine (1875) L R 10 Q B 195, it was held that on the passing of that Act, a person who had been convicted of felony, although he had served his sentence, became disqualified for ever for holding a licence, but the Civil Rights of Convicts Act, 1828 (9 Geo 4, c 32), was not referred to in that case (though POLLOCK, B, in Hay v Tower Division of London Justices, supra, at p 566, seems to have thought it was), and the effect of the endurance of punishment was not considered, see Leyman v Latimer (1877), 3 Ex D 15

(l) See Corner, Crown Practice, 240, Short and Mellor Practice of the Crown Office, 2nd ed., 270—271 Outlawry in civil proceedings has been abolished (Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 59), s 3) Outlawry in criminal cases has never been abolished It has, however, passed into disuse. The last instance of any proceeding in outlawry was in R v Tempest (1800), Short and Mellor, Practice of the Crown Office, 2nd ed., 270, but no judgment was pronounced in that case as the defendant surrendered The last judgment of outlawry was in R v Swabey (1800), see Short and Mellor, Practice of the Crown Office, 2nd ed., 270

In the case of offences punishable with death judgment of outlawry makes the person liable to suffer death and confiscation of property, on the defendant being brought before the court execution is awarded on the judgment of outlawry without any further judgment (n)

In other cases judgment of outlawry renders the defendant liable to perpetual imprisonment, and to the forfeiture of his personal property and the profits of his real estate (o)

In the case of indictments for treason and felony a judgment of outlawry operates as a conviction upon such indictments (p) In the case of indictments for misdemeanour such judgment does not so operate (q).

Traversing and reversal of outlawry

831 A defendant upon a charge of treason who has been outlawed may appear in the High Court of Justice within a year, and traverse the outlawry, and undergo trial on the indictment (r)

Where a defendant upon a charge of felony or misdemeanour has been outlawed, there appears to be no means now provided for securing the reversal of such outlawry (s) The only way in which such judgment of outlawry can be rendered inoperative is by a royal pardon or by an Act of Parliament (a)

Appeal to Court of Criminal

SECT 1
The Court
of Criminal Appeal

Abolition of writs of error and new trials in
cases

Writs of error are abolished (e), but it seems that in all cases in which error could have been brought before the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (f), an appeal will now lie as on a question of law to the Court of Criminal Appeal, and that the effect of the abolition of writs of error is only to alter the procedure in cases in which such writs would have been applicable. The powers and practice formerly existing in the High Court of Justice in respect of motions for new trials and the granting of new trials in criminal cases are abolished (g). The Court of Criminal Appeal have no power to order a new trial (h).

A person who has been convicted on indictment may also appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal by way of case stated (i), if the judge who tried him consents to grant a case (k).

Appeal by
case stated

833 If the Attorney-General gives a certificate to the Director of Public Prosecutions or to the prosecutor or defendant that the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal in a particular case involves a point of law of exceptional public importance, and that it is desirable in the public interest that a further appeal should be brought, an appeal will lie from the Court of Criminal Appeal to the House of Lords, in all other cases the determination of the Court of Criminal Appeal is final and no appeal lies from it (l).

When appeal lies to House
of Lords

834 A person who has been convicted on an indictment may appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal without leave on any ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone. If the judge who tries him certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal, or if the Court of Criminal Appeal give leave, such a person may appeal

leave

(d) On a conviction on an indictment for non-repair of highway etc the appeal lies, not to the Court of Criminal Appeal, but to the Court of Appeal.

(f) 7 Edw 7, c 23.

(g) Ibid., s 20 (1). It is not clear whether this applies to a case where an indictment has been removed by certiorari. A new trial may still be granted by the Court of Appeal in the case of an indictment for non-repair of a highway etc.

(i) See Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 78).

(k) Ibid., ss 1, 2. By the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 20 (4), all the jurisdiction under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 78), which was originally vested in the judges of the Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, and was by the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c 66), s. 47, transferred to the judges of the High Court of Justice, is now vested in the Court of Criminal Appeal. That court may decide that the procedure under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 78) as to the statement of a case should be followed, and require a case to be stated accordingly under that Act in the same manner as if a question of law had been reserved (Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 20 (4)). It seems that a case may still be stated under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 78), without any such order, if the presiding judge at the trial consents to state a case.

against his conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of fact alone or a mixed question of law and fact, or any other ground which appears to the court to be a sufficient ground of appeal. If the Court of Criminal Appeal give leave, such a person may appeal against the sentence passed upon him, unless the sentence is one fixed by law (m)

835 On an appeal being brought against a conviction the court are to allow the appeal, if they think—

(1) That the verdict of the jury should be set aside on the ground that it is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence (n),

(2) That the judgment should be set aside on the ground that the decision of the court below was wrong on any question of law (o),

(m) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 3. A person sentenced to preventive detention under the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 59), may appeal without leave against such a sentence, see ibid., s 11. The sentence of death is fixed by law in cases of murder, treason, piracy, burning the King's ships etc., and see p 409, ante. For form of certificate by the judge at the trial, see Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, schedule, Form 1. "Sentence" in the Criminal Appeal Act includes any order of court made on conviction with reference to the person convicted or his wife or children, and any recommendation of the court as to the making of an expulsion order in the case of a person convicted who is an alien (Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 21). The "conviction" against which the appeal is brought means here, it seems, the verdict of the jury, and not the sentence of the court (R v Miles (1890), 24 Q B D 423, C C R, R v Blaby, [1894] 2 Q B 170, C C R), but see Burgess v Boetefeur (1844), 7 Man & G 481, at p 504. There is no appeal against the finding of a jury that a prisoner is fit to plead (R v Jefferson (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 95). There is no appeal against a sentence substituted by the King on the recommendation of the Home Secretary for a death sentence (R v Lord (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 110). A prisoner who pleads guilty will only in very exceptional circumstances be allowed to appeal against his conviction, but he may by leave appeal against his sentence (R v Lucas (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 61, R v Eltridge, [1909] 2 K B 21, C C A (overruling R v Davidson (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 51), R v Sneyby (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 178, in R v Verney (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 107 leave was given in exceptional circumstances to a prisoner to appeal against his conviction and to call evidence, and the conviction was quashed). As to appeals against sentence, see p 435, post.

(n) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c 23), s 4 (1). These words are adopted from the judgment of the House of Lords in Metropolitan Rail Co v Wright (1886), 11 App Cas 152, which lays down the rules according to which the verdict of a jury in a civil case will or will not be supported (R v Ashford (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 183). of Criminal

In any other case the court are to dismiss the appeal, and even if they think that the point raised in the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant they may dismiss the appeal, if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred (q)

If the court allow an appeal against a conviction, they must quash the conviction and direct a judgment and verdict of acquittal to be entered (a)

836 On an appeal against sentence the court, if they think a different sentence should have been passed, are to quash the sentence and pass such other sentence warranted in law as they think ought to have been passed, and in other cases are to dismiss the appeal; the substituted sentence may be more or less severe than the sentence passed, a different sentence may be passed, whether the appellant has or has not pleaded guilty (b)

Where the jury could on the indictment on which the appellant has been convicted have found him guilty of some other offence (d), and it appears that the jury must have been satisfied of facts which proved him guilty of such other offence, the court, instead of allowing or dismissing the appeal, may substitute for the verdict found by the jury a verdict for such other offence, and may in substitution for the sentence passed pass such a sentence, not more severe than the one passed, as is warranted by law for such other offence (e)

855 Any documents, exhibits, or other things connected with the proceedings on the trial of any person on indictment who, if convicted, is entitled or may be authorised to appeal, are to be kept in the custody of the court of trial, in accordance with rules of court made for the purpose, for such time as may be provided by the rules, and subject to such power as may be given by the rules for the conditional release of any such documents etc from that custody (h)

be furnished
by registrar

856. The registrar must furnish the necessary forms and instructions in relation to notices of appeal and application under the Act to any person who demands them, and to officers of courts, governors of prisons, and such other officers or persons as he thinks fit (l)

registrar as to

The governor of a prison must cause such forms and instructions to be placed at the disposal of prisoners desiring to appeal or to make any application to the court, and cause any such notice given by a prisoner in his custody to be forwarded to the registrar (l)

The registrar must report to a judge of the court any case in which it appears to him that a solicitor and counsel, or counsel only, ought to be assigned to an appellant, although no application has been made for the purpose (m)

Shorthand

857 Shorthand notes are to be taken of the proceedings at the trial on indictment of any person who, if convicted, is entitled or may be authorised to appeal under the Act, and on any appeal or application for leave to appeal a transcript of the notes, or any part of such notes, is to be made, if the registrar so directs, and to be furnished to the registrar for the use of the court, and a transcript is to be furnished to any party interested upon the payment of such charges as the Treasury may fix (n)

If a judge of the court refuses any application of an appellant, the appellant may have the application determined by the full court of not less than three judges (o)

859 The Act does not affect the prerogative of mercy, but the Secretary of State, on the consideration of any petition for the exercise of such prerogative with reference to the conviction of a person on indictment or to the sentence (other than sentence of death) passed on a person so convicted, may at any time refer the whole case to the court, and the case is then to be heard and determined by the court as in the case of an appeal by a person convicted, or the Secretary of State may refer any point arising in such a case to the court for their opinion, and the court are to consider the point so referred and furnish the Secretary of State with their opinion (p)

References to the Court by Secretary of State.

860 The Act applies to convictions on criminal informations and coroners' inquisitions, and to orders made by a court of quarter sessions in respect of an incorrigible rogue, in the same way as the Act applies to convictions on indictments (q)

Convictions to which the Act applies.

The Act does not apply to convictions on indictments or inquisitions charging any peer or peeress, or other person claiming the privilege of peerage, with any offence not triable by a court of assize (a)

(o) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 17, Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, rr 25, 42 (b), a single judge may refer applications to the full court, see R v Munn (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 4 at p 5. As to notice of application for bail, see R v Ridley (1909), 25 T L R 508, O C A

(p) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 19, Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, rr 48, 51. The power which s 19 of the Act gives to the Secretary of State of referring either "the whole case" or any "point arising in the case" to the court, and the power of the court to hear and determine the whole case or to consider any point so referred and to furnish their opinions to the Secretary of State are limited to convictions on indictment, but in R v Johnson [1909], 1 K B 439, O C A, the Secretary of State referred to the court under s 19 (a) a conviction not on indictment, and the court heard and determined the case and quashed the sentence, though they were bound to hold that, while the conviction was wrong, they had in that particular case no power to deal with the conviction. If the Secretary of State refers a point to the court for their opinion, the court, unless they otherwise determine, are to consider the point in private (Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, r 51)

(q) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 20 (2). See the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 83), s 5. No appeal under the Act lies from the conviction of an incorrigible rogue at petty sessions, the only appeal is against the sentence passed at quarter sessions (R v Brown (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 85, R v O'Brien (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 193, R v Edwards (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 79). In one case an order made at quarter sessions on a conviction at petty sessions was referred to the court under s 19 of the Act (R v Johnson (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 13), and the court heard and determined the case, sed quare (see note (p))

(a) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 20 (2). As to indictments etc. against peers etc., see p 266, ante.

SECT 2
Procedure
 Indictments for non repair etc of highways.

An appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal does not lie in the case of convictions on indictments at common law in relation to the non-repair or obstruction of a highway, public bridge, or navigable river. An appeal from such a conviction lies in all respects as if the conviction were a verdict in a civil action tried at assizes (b).

SECT 3 — Pardon.

Royal
 pardon

861 The royal prerogative of mercy may be exercised irrespective of any appeal and after the failure of an appeal to the court (c). Any punishment for any crime may, except where a statute otherwise expressly provides (d), be remitted by the Sovereign, and any crime punishable by criminal process in England may be pardoned by him at any time both after and before judgment (e).

Besides a royal pardon under the Great Seal or under the sign manual there may be a pardon by an Act of Parliament (f).

(b) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 20 (3). See addition to r 17 of the Crown Office Rules, 1906, [1908] W N p 165. An appeal from such a conviction is to be set down and entered at the Crown Office, and if the indictment has not already been removed into the King's Bench Division for the purpose of trial, a writ of certiorari is to issue on the setting down of the appeal to remove the indictment into the King's Bench Division for the purpose of appeal to the Court of Appeal without any order or recognisance (ibid).

(c) Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 19.

(d) See Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car 2, c 2), s 11, which provides that anyone who commits, detains etc any person contrary to the Act is to suffer the penalties of praemunire and is to be disallowed from bearing any office of trust in England and incapable of any pardon from the King in respect of such forfeitures and disabilities.

(e) For pardon, generally, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol VI, p 404.

Part IX.—Costs, Compensation, and Rewards.

SECT 1—Order for Costs.

SECT 1

Order for Costs

862 The payment of costs in criminal proceedings, except when an indictment has been removed by certiorari, depends entirely upon statute, and is governed by the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908

Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908

863 A court of assize or court of quarter sessions before which any indictable offence (except an offence in relation to the non-repair or obstruction of any highway, public bridge, or navigable river) is prosecuted or tried may direct the payment of the costs of the prosecution or defence or both out of the funds of a county borough, if the offence is committed or supposed to have been committed in a county borough, and in other cases out of the county fund of the administrative county in which the offence was committed or was supposed to have been committed (g)

Payment of costs of prosecution or defence out of local funds

864 The amount of costs the payment of which the court can order is, subject to the regulations made by the Secretary of State (h), such an amount as appears to the court reasonably sufficient to compensate the prosecutor for the expenses properly incurred by him in carrying on the prosecution and to compensate any person properly attending to give evidence for the prosecution or defence, or called to give evidence at the instance of the court, for the expense, trouble, or loss of time properly incurred in or incidental to such attendance and giving of evidence (i)

Amount of costs

(g) Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 1, 4, 9 (i) As to county boroughs and administrative counties, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT The costs ordered under this Act with regard to offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England (see p 273, ante) are to be paid out of the funds of the county or county borough where the defendant is tried, and if he is tried at the Central Criminal Court, out of the funds of the county of London, but any costs paid in such cases out of the funds of a county or county borough are to be repaid out of moneys provided by Parliament (ibid, s 4 (1)) In prosecutions relating to the non-repair or obstruction of any highway, public bridge, or navigable river costs may be allowed as in civil proceedings, as if the prosecutor or defendant were plaintiff or defendant in such proceedings (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 9 (3)) The effect of this is that in all such cases where the jury give a verdict, costs follow the verdict, unless the judge who tries the case shall for good cause otherwise order (R S C, 1883, Ord 65, r 1) As to costs in proceedings before justices, see Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 1 (1) (b), and title MAGISTRATES

(h) As to the making of such regulations, see Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 5, and for the regulations see [1908] W N, Part II, p 343, and [1909] W N, Part II, p 3

(i) Ibid, s 1 (2) The costs which may be ordered in the case of the prosecutor will include the costs of solicitor and counsel. Such costs cannot, it is clear, be allowed in the case of the defence, except where the defendant has obtained a certificate for legal aid under the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903 (3 Edw 7, c 38). In such a case the costs of the defence which may be ordered to be paid include the fees of solicitor and counsel, the costs of a copy of the depositions, and any other expenses properly incurred in carrying on the defence (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 1 (3)) In other cases the costs

SECT. 1*Order for Costs

Ascertainment of amount Order for payment

The amount of costs directed to be paid must be ascertained as soon as practicable by the proper officer of the court, and as soon as the amount is ascertained the proper officer is to make out and deliver to the person in whose favour the order has been made, or to any person who appears to the proper officer to be acting on behalf of that person, an order upon the treasurer of the county or borough out of the funds of which the costs are payable for the payment of that amount (a)

Payment

865 The treasurer of any county or county borough on whom such order is made must upon sight of the order pay out of the county fund or borough fund or rate to the person named in the order or his duly authorised agent the sums specified in the order, and must be allowed such sums in his accounts (b)

Attendance of treasurer of county council or county
borough

For the purpose of the payment of such sums the council of every county and of every county borough must cause their treasurer, or some other person on his behalf, to attend at every court of assize or quarter sessions at which any indictable offence is to be tried in respect of which an order as to costs can be made on the treasurer, and to remain in attendance for that purpose during the sitting of the court, or until such hour as the court shall direct (c)

Regulations of Secretary of State

866 A Secretary of State may make regulations generally for carrying the Act (d) into effect, and in particular with respect to the rates or scales of payment of any costs which are payable out of local funds and the conditions under which any such costs may be allowed, the manner in which an officer of the court making any payment on account of costs to any person in respect of his attendance to give evidence is to be reimbursed out of local funds, and the form of orders, certificates and notices under the Act, and the furnishing of information, when certificates are forwarded by officers of courts of summary jurisdiction or of examining justices (e)

convicted person to pay costs

867 The court by or before which any person is convicted of an indictable offence may, if they think fit, in addition to any payable to the defence seem to be limited to the expenses of witnesses (ibid, s 1 (2)). Expenses of witnesses to character, whether for the prosecution or the defence are not allowed at a court of assize or quarter sessions, unless the court shall otherwise order (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1905 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 1 (4)). The examining justices (see p 328, ant) may as regards the preliminary investigation of an indictable offence direct the payment of the costs of the prosecution or defence, or both, out of the funds of the county or borough in the same way as a court of assize or quarter sessions (ibid, ss 1, 3)

(a) Ibid, s 1 (2), 2 The order of a court of assize or quarter sessions is to include the amount of costs directed to be paid by the examining justices, and certified by them, in respect of the proceedings before them (ibid, s 3) The proper officer is the clerk of the peace in the case of quarter sessions or the clerk of assize in the case of assizes, or a deputy of either

(b) Ibid, s 4 (2)

(c) Ibid, s 4 (3) As to adjustment of financial relations between any counties and boroughs, when any change is brought about by the Act, see s 4 (4)

(d) Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15)

other punishment order the person convicted to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred in or about the prosecution and conviction, including any proceedings before the examining justices, as taxed by the proper officer of the court (f)

SECT. 1.
Order for Costs

866 In certain cases (g), when a person has been acquitted on an indictment or information by a private prosecutor, the court before which the person acquitted is tried may order the prosecutor to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred in or about the defence, including any proceedings before the examining justices, as taxed by the proper officer of the court Order that prosecution shall pay costs of person acquitted.

An order for the payment of costs by the person convicted or the prosecutor may be made in addition to an order directing payment of costs out of local funds

869 Where an order directing payment out of local funds is made, the costs are primarily payable out of local funds, but notice of any order for the payment of costs by the person convicted or by the prosecutor must be sent to the council of the county or borough out of the funds of which the costs are primarily payable (h). Such an order may be enforced by the council of the county or borough out of the funds of which the costs have been paid in the same manner as an order for the payment of costs made by the High Court in civil proceedings (i), or as a civil debt before a court of summary jurisdiction (k)

Enforcement of order for payment of costs.

(f) Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 6 (1)

(g) Ibid, s 6 (2) Such an order can only be made where (1) a person is acquitted on an indictment or information by a private prosecutor (a) for publication of a defamatory libel, (b) for any offence against the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict c 102), (c) or any corrupt practice within the meaning of the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict c 51), (d) for an offence under the Merchandise Marks Acts, 1867—1894 (30 & 31 Vict c 28, 54 & 55 Vict c 15, 57 & 58 Vict c 11), or (2) on an indictment presented to a grand jury under the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 17), where the person acquitted has not been committed to or detained in custody or bound by recognizance to answer the indictment. If a person is charged with an indictable offence and the justices, acting under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 42), dismiss the charge, and they are of opinion that the charge was not made in good faith, they may order the prosecutor to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred in or about the defence, if the amount ordered to be paid by such justices exceeds £25, the prosecutor may appeal against the order to a court of quarter sessions in the manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (11 & 12 Vict c 43, 42 & 43 Vict c 49, 47 & 48 Vict c 43) (see title MAGISTRATES), and no proceedings are to be taken upon the order, until either the time within which the appeal can be made has elapsed without an appeal being made or, if an appeal is made, until the appeal is determined or abandoned (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), s 6 (3)). If a person has been committed for trial for an indictable offence, or a prosecutor has been bound over to prosecute under the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 17), and the person is not ultimately tried, the court to which he is committed, or at which the prosecutor is bound over to prosecute, may order payment of costs as if he had been tried and acquitted (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 15), ss 7, 9 (2))

The person to whom the costs have been ordered to be paid by the prosecutor or defendant may recover them in the same manner (l)

If a person who is convicted has been ordered to pay costs, the order may be enforced out of any money taken from him on his apprehension, so far as the court so directs (l)

Costs in

870 The foregoing provisions with regard to the payment of costs in criminal cases apply to the case of a person committed as an incorrigible rogue (m), as though such person were committed for trial for an indictable offence (n) In the case of an appeal by such person to quarter sessions (o) such provisions apply as though the hearing of the appeal were the trial of an indictable offence (p)

The payment of such expenses of an appellant does not depend on any order of the court, but is subject to taxation (e)

There is no provision as to the payment of the costs or expenses of a respondent in an appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal

The foregoing provisions as to the payment of costs in criminal cases out of local funds are substituted for all other statutory provisions for the payment of expenses in the case of any indictment for felony or for misdemeanour (f)

SECT. 1.

Order for Costs

Provisions of costs in Criminal Cases Act supersede all other statutory provisions as to costs.

SECT. 2—Compensation and Rewards

873 If any person has been convicted of felony, the court before which he is tried may upon the application of any person aggrieved and immediately after the conviction award any sum of money, not exceeding £100, to be paid by the convicted felon by way of satisfaction or compensation for any loss of property suffered through or by means of the felony (g)

874 In the case of certain offences (h) an order may be made on the sheriff of the county for the payment of sums of money to the person or persons who shall appear to the court to have been active in the apprehension of the offender charged, the sum is to be such as to the court seems reasonable and sufficient to compensate such person for his expenses, exertions, and loss of time in or towards such apprehension (i)

Order for payment of rewards to persons who have been active in the apprehension of offenders.

875 If a man is killed in endeavouring to apprehend any person charged with any of such offences, the court before whom the person charged is tried may order the sheriff of the county to pay to the widow of the man, if he leaves a widow, or to his child or children, if his wife is dead, or if he leaves neither widow nor child, to his father or mother, such sum of money as to the court may seem meet (k)

Acts that constitute high treason

SECT 1 —Offences against the Sovereign

SUB-SECT 1 —High Treason

876 Every person is by statute guilty of high treason who (l) —

(1) Compasses or imagines the death, or any bodily harm tending to the death, maiming or wounding, imprisonment or restraint of the King, or the death of the Queen Consort, or of their eldest son and heir (m)

(2) Violates the Queen Consort or the King's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the King's eldest son and heir (n)

(3) Levies war against the King in his realm, or is adherent to the King's enemies in his realm, or gives them aid or comfort in the realm or elsewhere (o)

(4) Slays the Chancellor, Treasurer, or the judges of the High Court of Justice, or justices of assize or of oyer and terminer, being in their places and doing their offices (p)

(5) Endeavours to deprive or hinder the person next in succession to the Crown under the Act of Settlement (q) from succeeding, or, by writing or printing, maintains that any other person is entitled to the Crown (r)

Allegiance

877. The essence of the offence of treason lies in the violation of the allegiance which is owed to the King. This allegiance is owed not only by subjects of the King, but also by an alien living in this country and receiving the protection of its laws, so long as he is resident here, even if the State to which he belongs is at

(l) For treason generally see also title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol VI, p 345. High treason was so called in contrast to an offence which formerly was called petit treason, namely —the killing of a master by his servant, of a husband by his wife, of an ecclesiastical person by his inferior (Treason Act, 1351 (25 Edw 3, stat 5, c 2), 4 Bl Com 75, 203). There is now no such offence as petit treason, the offence which formerly amounted to petit treason having been by statute declared to be murder only and no greater offence (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 8).

(m) Treason Act, 1351 (25 Edw 3, stat 5, c 2), Treason Act, 1795 (36 Geo 3, c 7), s 1, made perpetual by the Treason Act, 1817 (57 Geo 3, c 6), s 1, see the Treason Felony Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 12), s 1, and p 457, post.

(n) Treason Act, 1351 (25 Edw 3, stat 5, c 2). See title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol VI, p 349.

(o) Ibid

(p) Ibid. The Treason Act, 1351 (25 Edw 3, stat 5, c 2), refers to the slaying of "the King's justices of the one bench or the other," i.e., the judges of the King's Bench or the Court of Common Pleas. These are now represented by the judges of the High Court of Justice (King's Bench Division). A doubt has been expressed whether the Act would include judges of the Chancery Division (Stephen, Digest of the Criminal Law, 5th ed, 45). "Chancellor" means Lord High Chancellor, "Treasurer" Lord High Treasurer, but there has been no Lord High Treasurer since 1714, since which date the office has always been in commission (Anson, Law and Customs of the Constitution, Vol II, Part I, 170).

war with the King (a) If an alien has lived in this country under the protection of the law, and the State of which he is a subject invades the King's territory and the alien assists the invader, the alien is guilty of treason (b)

SECT 1.
Offences
against the Sovereign

Ambassadors and persons attached to embassies are, it seems, only amenable to the laws of this country for treason if they are subjects of this country (c)

Ambassadors

The punishment for treason is death by hanging, but the King may substitute beheading for hanging (d)

Punishment.

(1) Compassing the Death of the King

878 The treason of compassing or imagining the death of the King, and, indeed, all treasons, must be proved (e) by overt, i.e., open, acts (f) It is an overt act of compassing the King's death, within the meaning of the statutes, wilfully and deliberately to do or attempt anything whereby the King's life may be endangered It is therefore an overt act of the treason of compassing the death of the King to enter into measures for deposing or imprisoning him, or to place his person in the power of conspirators against him, or to agree with foreigners to invade his dominions with force, or to go into a foreign country for that end, or to levy or conspire to levy war against him, or to raise an insurrection against him, or to destroy or conspire to destroy the constitution of the country (g)

Overt acts.

It is an overt act of treason to meet with others and consult how to kill the King, though no agreement be then come to, or to enter into a treasonable correspondence with the enemy, although the letters which constitute the correspondence are intercepted and never delivered (h)

Writings which import a compassing of the King's death may be alleged as overt acts to support an indictment, provided they are published (i)

Loose words, not relative to any act or design, although they may be in contempt of the King's person and may charge him with vicious or foolish conduct, are not overt acts (k) But arguments and words of advice or persuasion, uttered in contemplation of some traitorous purpose actually on foot or intended, and in prosecution of it, and consulting together for such a purpose, are such overt acts (l)

An act which constitutes another species of treason (e g, levying war) may be alleged as an overt act of compassing the death of the King (m) But a constructive levying of war is not an overt act of this species of treason (n)

(11) Levying War

Levying war
against the King.

879 The levying of war (a) must be by acts done within the realm, which formerly included only England and Wales and so much of the seas adjacent as came within the body of a county (b) The effect of later statutes is to extend the provisions of the Act to Scotland (c) and Ireland (d), but not to the Channel Islands or the colonies (e)

The levying of war must be against the King, and an attack upon private persons for a private end is not, whatever tumult be occasioned, a levying of war upon the King (f)

Offences
against the Sovereign

What acts amount to
levying war

880 To constitute a levying of war it is not necessary that blows should be struck, there must be bellum levatum, but not necessarily bellum percussum. It is sufficient, if there is an arming and arraying in warlike manner, as by enlisting and marching troops, or if there is an assembling in great numbers with warlike intent, or a cruising in a ship with the like intent (g). A bare conspiracy or consultation with a view to a levying of war, though it may in some cases amount to an overt act of compassing the King's death, is not a levying of war against him (h).

881 A small number of persons may be guilty of levying war against the King, if such persons are preparing to use violent measures in carrying out their purpose, as, e.g., by the use of explosives with a treasonable intent (i). If large numbers are assembled with a treasonable purpose, it is the purpose of the assembly which constitutes treason and distinguishes it from riot (k).

Number not material.

882 The levying of war may be of two kinds—(1) express and direct, as raising war against the King or his forces, or with a view to surprise or injure the King's person, or to imprison him, or to force him to remove any of his ministers or counsellors, and the like; or (2) constructive, as when there is a rising for some general public purpose, as to effect an alteration of the law, or to alter religion established by law, or to throw down all inclosures, or to open all prisons, or to pull down all meeting-houses (l). A person who takes part in any such acts, even though he had not previously any formed intention of taking part in them, is guilty of treason (m).

Direct levying of war

(2) Constructive

A rising to maintain a private claim of right, or to destroy particular inclosures or to remove private nuisances, or to break prisons in order to release particular persons (unless such persons are imprisoned for treason), or to destroy the machinery of a particular trade, does not amount to a levying of war within the meaning of the statute (n)

883 In an actual insurrection it is a levying of war to join with rebels in an act of rebellion. But if a person joins with rebels from force or from fear of death at their hands, and if he takes the first opportunity to escape from them, he will be excused, provided compulsion continued during substantially the whole of the time he remained with the rebels to such an extent that he may be presumed to have continued with them against his will (o)

An apprehension, however well grounded, of loss or destruction of property will not excuse one who joins with rebels, and compulsion and fear are no excuse for any other act of treason than that of joining with rebels or enemies (o)

Service in war under the King de facto is not an act of treason against the King de jure (p)

(iii) Adherence to the King's Enemies

Adherence
to the King's enemies

884 Adherence to the King's enemies must be evidenced by an overt act. Such adherence may be either within the realm or elsewhere (q)

The King's enemies are foreign States in actual hostility against him. Whether a particular State is in actual hostility or not is a question of fact for the jury, who may judge of the matter from public notoriety (r). It is not necessary that there should have been any formal declaration of war (s)

adherence

885 A person adheres to the King's enemy who, in conjunction with the enemy, commits hostile acts upon the King's ally who is also at war with the King's enemy (a)

If the subject of a foreign State not at war with the King invades the kingdom without his sovereign's warrant, he is nevertheless an enemy of the King, and a subject of the King who adheres to him is guilty of this species of treason (b)

Inciting a foreign State not at war with the King to invade the kingdom is not an adherence to the King's enemies, but is an overt act of compassing the King's death (c)

A distinction is drawn between "enemies" and "rebels," and assistance given to rebels within the realm is not an adherence to the King's enemies (d)

SECT. 1.
Offences
against the Sovereign

A person may adhere to the King's enemies by sending them money or provisions, or by rendering them any kind of aid or comfort which, when given to a rebel within the realm, would make the subject guilty of levying war (e)

Communications with the enemy from which he may derive information enabling him to shape his attack or defence constitute an adherence to the enemy (f) The fact that the communications were intercepted and did not reach the enemy is immaterial (g)

A British subject adheres to the King's enemies if he takes an oath of fidelity to them, or makes a declaration of willingness to take up arms on their behalf, or becomes naturalised in the hostile State while it is at war with the King, unless he acts under compulsion and returns to his allegiance as soon as possible (h)

Mere acts of submission to force majeure in case of an invasion are not overt acts of treason (i), nor is the refusal to give personal assistance to the King or his forces against an invading enemy (j).

(iv) Indictment and Trial

886 All persons who incite, aid, or abet an act of treason, or who receive or protect a traitor, are guilty of treason as principals and should be indicted as such There are no accessories either before or after the fact in treason A person who commits an act by which, in felony, he would become an accessory is in treason a principal traitor (k)

SECT 1

Offences
against the Sovereign

887 Different kinds of treason and different overt acts may be alleged in the same indictment, and such joinder does not vitiate the indictment nor afford any ground for putting the Crown to an election to proceed on one charge (l)

Overt acts

888 The treason alleged must be proved by overt acts, and the overt acts upon which it is intended to rely must be expressly alleged in the indictment (m), and must be proved (n), and no evidence is admissible of any overt act that is not so alleged unless it affords direct proof of any of the overt acts that are laid (o)

Copy of indictment and list of witnesses and petty jury

889 A copy of the indictment must be supplied to the accused ten days before the trial, together with a list of the witnesses and, except where the treason charged is the assassination of or any attempt upon the person of the Sovereign, a list of the petty jury, with their addresses and occupations (a) Where there is a failure to comply with the last-named requirements, advantage of the omission cannot be taken by plea, but an application may be made for a postponement of the trial (b)

time.

890 An indictment for treason must be found by the grand jury within three years next after the commission of the treason, unless in the case of the treason of designing, endeavouring, or attempting the assassination of the King, in which case there is no limitation of time (c)

Two witnesses necessary

species of treason (d) Both the witnesses must be credible, and the jury must believe them both (e)

SECT 1
Offences
against the Sovereign

One witness is sufficient to prove a collateral fact, not tending to the proof of the overt act, e g, the status or nationality of a person (f)

If the prisoner confesses in open court, the two witnesses are not required (g)

Evidence of confessions out of court is admissible, but such evidence is not sufficient in itself, and can only be supplementary to the evidence of the two witnesses required by statute (h)

892 Except in the case of treason committed abroad, proof must be given that one of the overt acts alleged was committed within the jurisdiction of the court, when this has been done, evidence can be given of the commission of the alleged overt acts committed outside the jurisdiction of the court (i)

Evidence.

893 Where the overt acts charged in the indictment show a conspiracy between the prisoner and others, evidence may be given of any acts committed by a co-conspirator in the execution of the common design, even if such acts occurred after the dates of the alleged overt acts and after the prisoner's arrest, if such events were the natural result of the conspiracy in which he was engaged, as, e g, the breaking out of an insurrection which was the object of the conspiracy (k)

Conspiracy.

894 In treason a married woman cannot excuse herself by alleging that she acted under the coercion of her husband (l) But if the husband commits treason and his wife knowingly receives him, she does not herself become guilty of treason (m)

the style or honour of the Crown of the United Kingdom or of any of the King's dominions, or (2) to levy war against the King within the United Kingdom in order by force or constraint to compel him to change his measures or counsels, or in order to put force or constraint upon or to intimidate or overawe either House of Parliament, or to move or stir any foreigner with force to invade the United Kingdom or any of the King's dominions, and who expresses, utters, or declares such compassings or intentions by publishing any printing or writing, or by any overt act or deed (o)

896 There may be accessories to the offence of treason felony. A principal in the second degree and an accessory before the fact are punishable in the same manner as a principal in the first degree, accessories after the fact are liable to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years (p)

Indictment.

897 Any number of overt acts may be charged in an indictment for treason felony (q). It is a sufficient overt act that the accused conspired with others (r) to commit any offence specified by the Treason Felony Act, 1848 (s), if there was an overt act committed within the King's dominions. If the matters alleged in the indictment or proved at the trial amount in law to treason, the indictment is not on that account defective, nor is the accused entitled to an acquittal, but an acquittal or conviction on an indictment for treason felony will be a bar to a prosecution for treason upon the same facts (t).

Overt acts

isdiction

Even although the prisoner has not committed within the King's dominions any of the acts mentioned in the statute he may be tried in an English court in respect of the act of a co-conspirator committed within the jurisdiction of the court in furtherance of the common object (u).

Punishment.

898 The punishment for treason felony is penal servitude for life, or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with hard labour for not more than two years (b).

(o) As to what amounts to a "levying of war," see p 452, ante, and R v Dowds (1848), 3 Cox, C C 509, R v Gallagher (1883), 15 Cox, C C 291. As to overt acts, see note (e) on p 451 ante.

(u) R v Meany (1867), 10 Cox, C C 506 (Ir), C C R, see also R v Deasy (1883), 15 Cox, C C 334. Unless some overt act is committed within the King's dominions, there can be no prosecution for treason felony (R v Meany, supra).

SUB-SECT 3—*Assaults on the King*SECT 1.
Offences
against the Sovereign.Assaults on the King.

899 By statute (c) a person is guilty of a high misdemeanour who—(1) wilfully discharges or attempts to discharge or points, aims, or presents at or near the person of the King any gun, pistol, or any other firearm or other arms, whether the same does or does not contain any explosive or destructive material, or discharges or causes to be discharged or attempts to discharge or causes to be discharged any explosive substance or material near to the King's person, (2) wilfully strikes or attempts to strike at the King with any offensive weapon or in any other manner, (3) wilfully throws or attempts to throw any substance etc at or upon the person of the King (d), (4) wilfully produces or has near the person of the King any gun etc, or any explosive, destructive, or dangerous matter, with intent to use the same to injure the person of the King or to alarm him (e) The offence is not triable at quarter sessions (f)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and not more than three whippings during the imprisonment (g)

Upon an indictment for shooting at the King it is unnecessary to prove any intention to inflict personal injury or to prove that the firearm used was capable of doing such an injury (h)

(c) Treason Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 51), s 2 See title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol VI, p 356

(h) R v Hamilton (1849), 7 State Tr (N S) 1130

(i) In the earlier works on criminal law a long list of offences are given under the heading of "contempts" or "misprisions" These were either contempts against the King's palace or courts of justice, or against his person, title, prerogative, or Government (see 1 Hawk P C 61, c 6, 4 Bl Com 122, 3 Co Inst 140 Petersdorff's Abridgment, tit Contempt) Some contempts of this character may now be dealt with as seditious libels (see R v Harvey (1823), 2 B & C 257), and others are now hardly likely to form the subject of prosecution, e.g. such as disobedience to a summons to attend the Privy Council, or to a royal letter requiring a subject to return from abroad (4 Bl Com 122, Petersdorff's Abridgment, tit Contempt) No prosecution for such an offence has occurred in modern times In R v Harris (1791), 4 Term Rep 202, it was held to be a misdemeanour to disobey an order of the King in Council made under the provisions of an Act of Parliament which did not specify any penalty for disobedience, but this was apparently upon the ground that the defendant had really disobeyed the statute, and see R v Hall, [1891] 1 Q B 747, 767.

justice (k), or to disobey the provisions of an Act of Parliament, where no particular penalty is imposed and when the act is one which prohibits a matter of public grievance or commands a matter of public convenience (l). Where a statute only extends to disputes of a private nature (m), or where a particular remedy or punishment is provided by the statute (n), disobedience to it cannot be punished as a contempt.

Punishment.

The punishment for this offence is fine and imprisonment without hard labour (o).

SECT 2 — Offences against Public Tranquillity.

SUB-SECT 1 — Seditious

conspiracy.

901 Every person is guilty of the common law misdemeanour of seditious conspiracy who agrees with someone else (not being his or her wife or husband) to do any act for the furtherance of a common seditious intention, e.g., to hold a meeting for the purpose of disturbing the public peace or of raising discontent and disaffection or exciting hatred and contempt of the Government (p).

Seditious
libel.

902 Every person is guilty of the common law misdemeanour of seditious libel if, with seditious intention, he either speaks and publishes any words or publishes a libel (q).

The freest public discussion, comment, criticism, and censure, either at meetings or in the Press, in relation to all political or party questions, all public acts of the servants of the Crown, all acts of the Government, and all proceedings of courts of justice are permissible, and no narrow construction is to be put upon the expressions used in such a discussion etc., but the criticism and censure must be without malignity, and must not impute corrupt or malicious motives (r).

If the words used, however defamatory, were not spoken with a seditious intention the defendant is not guilty, such an intention

(q) The libel may be in writing, print, or may be contained in a drawing or engraving, or painted picture, or sculpture, or any permanent representation (R v Sullivan (1868), 11 Cox, C C 44, at p 55). Libel in civil cases is restricted to such permanent representations, but in criminal cases words spoken may amount to a seditious libel

The punishment for these offences is imprisonment without hard labour for a period not exceeding two years with or without a fine (t).

SECT. 1.

Public

903 Seditious words with regard to the administration of justice in a superior court, whether spoken in or out of court, are punishable by indictment or information, or summarily by attachment for contempt, by the court whose proceedings are defamed (u), and the last-mentioned course is that which is now usually adopted.

Libel on the justice.

Such words spoken of an inferior court of record are punishable summarily by that court, if they are spoken in the face of the court (a). If spoken of the judge out of court and relating to the execution of his office they are indictable, but not if they are only abusive or defamatory of the judge personally (b).

904 Words spoken in Parliament by a member of Parliament cannot be the subject of indictment or other proceedings out of Parliament (c). But if the member afterwards publishes his speech, to incite the people to take the power into their own hands and to provoke them to tumult and disorder is a seditious intention (R v Collins (1839), 9 C & P 456, at p. 461, per LITTLEDALE, J, and see R v Burdett (1820), 1 State Tr (N s) 1, 50).

(s) R v M'Hugh, [1901] 2 I R 569, 567. If the words, whether written or spoken, have a direct tendency to cause unlawful meetings and disturbances and to lead to a violation of the laws, they are seditious, as the defendant will be taken to have intended the natural consequences of what he has done (R v Lovell (1839), 9 C & P 462, 466, per LITTLEDALE, J, R v Sullivan, supra, at p. 58, see also R v Horne (1777), 20 State Tr 651, 762). The document containing an alleged seditious libel must be considered as a whole, if it is contained in a newspaper, the defendant is entitled to have read in evidence other passages in the same newspaper tending to show his intention in publishing the specific paragraph complained of (R v Lambert (1810), 2 Camp 398). On the trial of Horne Tooke for high treason passages from his writings some years previously were allowed by EYRE, C.J., to be read on the prisoner's behalf to show his political sentiments (R v Horne Tooke (1794), 25 State Tr 1, 321, 344, 361), but in R v Lambert, supra, LORD LLENBOROUGH, C.J., apparently doubted whether that evidence had been properly admitted.

(t) See Criminal Label Act, 1819 (60 Geo 3 & 1 Geo 4, c 8), s 4, stat 11 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 24, s 1. The person imprisoned is to be treated as a misdemeanant of the first division (Prison Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 21), s 40). On a conviction for a seditious libel, the court may make an order for seizure of all copies of the libel (Criminal Label Act, 1819 (60 Geo 3 & 1 Geo 4, c 8), s 1).

the absolute privilege is lost, and he may be indicted, if the publication was illegal (d)

905 In an indictment for seditious words spoken, or for a seditious libel, the words alleged to be seditious must be specified (e) It is not essential that the indictment should allege that the words were spoken or published "seditiously," if it alleges an intent which the law defines to be a seditious intent (f)

Evidence

906 If the manuscript of a seditious libel is proved to be in the handwriting of the defendant, and it is also proved that the same libel was in fact published, this is prima facie evidence for the jury of a publication by the defendant, though no evidence is adduced that he directed the publication (g)

To prove that the publication was with an unlawful intent or was not accidental, evidence of the publication of other libels is admissible, provided they expressly refer to the subject matter of the libel which is charged in the indictment (h)

It is essential that so much of the words alleged be proved at the trial as will support the charge of sedition, but it is immaterial that a portion is unproved, if what is proved substantially constitutes sedition (i)

If words spoken or published are seditious, it is no defence that they are true, and evidence to prove their truth is inadmissible (k)

jury

908 In all prosecutions for libel the jury are competent to give their verdict upon the whole matter in issue and cannot be required or directed by the judge to find a defendant guilty on proof of the publication of the libel by the defendant and of the result ascribed to the libel in the indictment (m)

909 A seditious intention is an intention—(1) to bring into hatred or contempt, or to excite disaffection against, the King or the Government and Constitution of the United Kingdom, or either House of Parliament, or the administration of justice (n), or (2) to excite the King's subjects to attempt, otherwise than by lawful means, the alteration of any matter in Church or State by law established, or (3) to incite any person to commit any crime in disturbance of the peace, or (4) to raise discontent or disaffection amongst His Majesty's subjects, or (5) to promote feelings of ill will and hostility between different classes of such subjects (o)

intention

But an intention is not seditious if the object is to show that the King has been misled or mistaken in his measures, or to point out errors or defects in the Government or Constitution with a view to their reformation, or to excite the subjects to attempt by lawful means the alteration of any matter in Church or State by law established, or to point out, in order to their removal, matters which are producing, or have a tendency to produce, feelings of hatred and ill will between classes of the King's subjects (p)

In this as in other offences a person is deemed to intend the consequences which would naturally follow from his conduct at the time, and in the circumstances, in which the words were used soever from any oath, covenant or engagement to endeavour a change of government either in Church or State, or (2) that both Houses or either House of Parliament have or has a legislative power without the King, the punishment for this offence is the penalty of præmunire. No person may be prosecuted for this statutory offence without an order of the King under the sign manual or of the Privy Council, and the prosecution must be commenced within six months next after the offence committed, and the indictment must be found within three months after the commencement of the prosecution (r)

Libels as to

911 Every person is by statute (s) guilty of a misdemeanour who maliciously and directly by preaching, teaching, or advised speaking declares that any person has any right to the Crown otherwise than according to the statutes (t) by which the succession is regulated, or that the Kings or Queens of the realm, with authority of Parliament, are not able to make laws to limit and bind the Crown and its descent. The punishment for the offence is the penalty of præmunire (u). An information for any such words spoken must be laid on oath before a justice within three days, the prosecution must be commenced within three months, and two credible witnesses are necessary (v).

None of the above offences is triable at quarter sessions (y).

914 A person is by statute (e) guilty of felony (1) who in any form administers or causes to be administered or a witness or is present at and consenting to the administering or taking of any oath or engagement purporting or intended to bind the persons taking it to engage in any mutinous or seditious purpose, or to disturb the peace, or to be of any society formed for such purpose, or to obey the orders of any committee or body not lawfully constituted, or of any leader not having authority by law for that purpose, or not to inform or give evidence against any associate or other person, or not to reveal any unlawful combination or any illegal act done or to be done or any illegal oath or engagement or its import, or (2) who takes any such oath without being compelled thereto

917 All meetings and assemblies of persons for the purpose of training or drilling themselves or of being trained or drilled to the use of arms or practising military evolutions without lawful authority from the King or the lord lieutenant or two justices of the county are prohibited by law (u)

Going armed

Every person who makes or sells arms knowing that they are to be used for an unlawful purpose is guilty of a misdemeanour which is punishable by fine or imprisonment (b)

SUB-SECT 6—Going Armed

918 Everyone is by statute (c) guilty of a misdemeanour who comes before the King's justices or other his ministers during their office with force and arms, or brings force "in affray of the peace," or goes armed by night or day in any fair, market, or in the presence of the King's justices or other ministers, or elsewhere, in such a manner as to terrify the King's subjects (d)

The punishment is forfeiture of the arms carried and imprisonment at the King's pleasure (e)

A man who has been threatened is not justified in going armed in public under such circumstances as to terrify others. But it is no offence for persons to wear common weapons upon occasions in which it is the common practice to wear them, where there can be no suspicion of an intention to commit any act of violence or disturbance of the peace (f)

SUB-SECT 7—Breach of the Peace

Affray.

919 If two or more persons fight in a public place to the terror of the King's subjects, this constitutes an affray and is a misdemeanour at common law, punishable with fine and imprisonment without hard labour (g). Fighting in a private place, or at some distance from the highway in a place where no others are present than those who are aiding and abetting, does not amount to an affray (h), but an assembly for such a purpose is unlawful, and the parties concerned may be convicted of assault, or of taking part in an unlawful assembly.

920 It is a common law misdemeanour verbally or in writing either to challenge a person to fight or to endeavour to provoke a person to give such a challenge (l) No amount of provocation will excuse the offender (m) If a challenge, or a letter inciting to a challenge, be written and sent, it is immaterial that it was not received by the person to whom it was addressed (n)

Challenges.

921 The above offences are triable at quarter sessions (o), and are punishable with fine and imprisonment without hard labour (p).

Punishment.

SUB-SECT. 8.—Unlawful Assemblies

922 An unlawful assembly (q) is an assembly of three or more persons with intent either to commit a crime by open force or to carry out any common purpose, lawful or unlawful, in such a manner as to give him and courageous persons (r) in the neighbourhood of such assembly reasonable grounds to apprehend a breach of the peace in consequence of it (s) To take part in an unlawful assembly is a common law misdemeanour, punishable with fine and imprisonment without hard labour (t)

assembly.

923 An assembly which was originally lawful may become unlawful, if a proposal is made at such meeting to do an act of violence to the disturbance of the public peace and such proposal is acted upon (u) If persons are assembled for an innocent purpose and with no intention of carrying it out unlawfully, as, e.g., for the purpose of a peaceable street procession, then meeting is not rendered unlawful by the fact that they may have good reason to believe that their proceedings will be opposed and a breach of the peace be committed by those opposing them (v) But persons so assembled are guilty of a misdemeanour, if they have determined to carry out their purpose by themselves using force (w)

A man may gather together his friends and servants to defend his own house against persons threatening to enter it unlawfully (x), but it is unlawful for him to assemble his friends for the defence of his person against those who threaten to beat him outside his house, as when he is on his way to market, for it is then his duty to appeal to the protection of the law (a)

924. Prize-fighting is illegal, and a meeting for the purpose of holding a prize fight is an unlawful assembly, and all persons present for the purpose of encouraging the principals to fight may be convicted of the offence of taking part in an unlawful assembly or of an assault (b)

925 All persons who convene or who take part in the proceedings of an unlawful assembly are guilty of the offence of taking part in an unlawful assembly. Persons present by accident or from curiosity alone without taking any part in the proceedings are not guilty of that offence (c), even though such persons possess the power of stopping the assembly and fail to exercise such power (d)

926 Meetings are unlawful which consist of more than fifty persons assembled in any street, square, or open place within one mile from Westminster Hall for the purpose or on the pretext of considering or preparing any petition, complaint, remonstrance, declaration, or other address to the King or to both Houses or either House of Parliament for alteration of matters in Church or State or which are convened for any day on which either House of Parliament shall meet and sit, or shall be summoned, adjourned, or prorogued to meet or sit, or for any day on which the High Court of Justice meets at the Royal Courts of Justice (e)

Meetings for the election of members of Parliament, and of persons attending upon the business of Parliament or at the High Court, are not unlawful (f)

927 Anyone is by statute (g) guilty of a misdemeanour who repairs to the King, or to both or either of the Houses of Parliament, upon pretence of presenting or delivering any petition etc.,

The offenders must be prosecuted within six months of the offences being committed. The evidence of two credible witnesses is required (h)

The penalty for this offence is £100 and three months' imprisonment (i)

It is not, however, unlawful for persons not exceeding ten in number to present any public or private complaint to any member of Parliament, or to the King, for any remedy to be had thereon, nor is it unlawful for members of Parliament to present any address to the King during the sitting of Parliament (h)

SECT. 2.
Offences against Public

SUB-SECT. 9—Rout and Riot

928 A rout is a disturbance of the peace by persons assembling together with an intention to do anything which, if it be executed, will make them rioters, and who actually make a motion towards the execution of it (l). A rout in itself constitutes a common law misdemeanour which is punishable by fine and imprisonment, but where the intention is in any degree effected, it is usually prosecuted as a riot

929 A riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three or more persons (m), who assemble together, without lawful authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature (n), and who afterwards actually begin or execute the same in a violent and turbulent manner to the terror of the people (o). It is immaterial whether the enterprise intended was of itself lawful or unlawful (p), and it is sufficient if only one person was put in fear (q)

If persons meet on a lawful occasion but suddenly quarrel and fight, this is not a riot, but is an affray, of which only those are guilty who actually engage in it. If the persons so present form themselves into parties upon the dispute arising, with promises of mutual assistance, and then make an affray, they are guilty of a riot

(h) 13 Car. 2, stat. 1, c. 5 s. 1. By virtue of this statute the offence is triable at quarter sessions, but see Quarter Sessions Act, 1817 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38), s. 1

(q) R. v. Phillips (1842), 2 Mood C. C. 252. It would seem that where in the course of the tumultuous assembly an act of violence is done, it is not necessary to allege in the indictment that the proceeding was in terrorem populi (R. v. Solea (1707), 11 Mod. Rep. 115, per Holt, C. J., at p. 117).

Sec. 2
Offences

Tran-
quillity.

If persons are gathered on an innocent occasion, and a sudden proposal is made that they should go in a body to do any act of violence, e g, to pull down a house, and such motion is agreed to and executed, this constitutes a riot (r) Where the meeting is for the purpose of enforcing a claim of right, as, e g, by pulling down an alleged unlawful inclosure, this does not amount to a riot, provided no excessive number of persons are present and there is no use of threatening words or gestures or of more violence than is necessary for the purpose (s)

All persons who take part in a riot are guilty of a misdemeanour at common law, which is punishable by fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (t).

Riot Act.

930. If any persons to the number of twelve or more are unlawfully, riotously, and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance of the public peace, it is the duty of the justices of the peace, or the sheriff or under-sheriff of the county, or the mayor, bailiff, or other head officer, or justices of the peace of any city or town corporate where such assembly is gathered, to go to the place where the rioters are assembled and make a proclamation in a prescribed form ordering them to disperse (v) If persons to the number of twelve or more unlawfully, riotously, and tumultuously remain or continue together for one hour after such proclamation is made (a), they are guilty of felony (b) An indictment based on the Riot Act need not allege that the assembly was to the public terror (c)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d)

(v) Riot Act, 1714 (1 Geo 1, stat 2, c 5) The following is the form prescribed by s 2 of that Act — "Our sovereign lord the King chargeth and commandeth all persons, being assembled, immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably to depart to their habitations or to their lawful business upon the pains contained in the Act made in the first year of the King George for preventing tumults and riotous assemblies God save the King" The same section provides that the proclamation is to be made amongst the rioters, or as near to them as the justice can safely come, with a loud voice, and after he has commanded silence while the proclamation is made The words of the statutory proclamation must be read verbatim (R v Child (1830), 4 C & P 442, where a prosecution for felony based on the Riot Act failed, because the words "God save the King" were omitted from the proclamation)

(a) If the proclamation is made more than once, the hour will be computed from the time of the first reading (R v Woolcock (1833), 5 C & P 516) The fact that the accused has absented himself for a minute or two is no defence, if he substantially continued making part of the assembly for the hour (*R v. Power is given by statute (d) to justices of the peace and the sheriff or under-sheriff to arrest rioters, with the posse comitatus if need be, and to record what they shall find to have been done in their presence against the law, and by such record the offenders may be convicted in the same manner and form as under the Statute of Forcible Entries (e) It is the duty of sheriffs, under-sheriffs, justices of the peace, and constables to do all that in them lies to suppress riots, and if they negligently fail to take proper steps for that purpose, they are punishable by fine or imprisonment (f) unusual number of persons as plainly to show that force will be resorted to (l) A mere trespass will not support an indictment for forcible entry There must be proof of either such force, or such show of force, as is calculated to prevent any resistance (m).

937 Entry obtained through an unclosed window or by opening a door with a key, or by means of threats to despoil a man's goods (n), or by enticing the owner out of possession or excluding him when he is out (o), is not a forcible entry

A person is not guilty of forcible entry who, although pretending title to land, merely passes over it, with or without attendants armed or unarmed, on his way to church, or to market, or for such like purpose, providing he does no act which either expressly or impliedly amounts to a claim to the lands (p) If a man enters peaceably into a house, but turns the occupant out of possession by force, this may be a forcible entry (q) If a man enters with force to distrain for rent in arrears, this is a forcible entry, for although he does not claim the land itself, he claims a right out of it (r)

A lessee who with force resists a distress for rent, or who forestalls (s) or rescues the distress, is guilty of a forcible detainer (t)

The offence of forcible entry may be committed with regard to ecclesiastical possessions, as churches, vicarages, or tithes (u)

There can be no forcible entry upon an easement, such as a right of way (a)

the very act of trespass immediately, and without acquiescence by the rightful possessor, give himself possession in any legal sense as against the person whom he ejects (d), and the latter is entitled to use force in turning him out, provided he does him no personal injury (e). A joint tenant or a tenant in common may be indicted for the forcible expulsion of his co-tenant (g). A wife may be indicted for a forcible entry upon land in the possession of her husband (h).

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment without hard labour, and fine (i).

Forcible
detainer

940 A person is by common law and by statute (j) guilty of a misdemeanour who, except in the cases hereafter mentioned, maintains by force the possession of lands or tenements, whether such possession was lawful in its origin or not.

The same circumstances of violence or terror which make an entry forcible make a detainer forcible also; but a bare refusal to leave a house and a continuing therein do not amount to a forcible detainer (k). The forcible continuance in possession by a tenant whose term has expired, or by a mortgagor after the mortgagee is entitled to take possession, or the forcible resistance by a tenant to a distress for rent, is a forcible detainer (l). Those who keep possession with force any lands and tenements, whereof they or their ancestors, or they whose estate they have in such lands and tenements, have continued in possession for three years, are not within the statute (m). And a man may lawfully defend possession of his dwelling-house by force against a wrongful and forcible intruder (n).

If a writ of restitution is so granted, and the defendant is afterwards acquitted on the indictment or the indictment is quashed, a super sedas may be obtained either from the justices who granted the writ of restitution or from the King's Bench Division of the High Court. The granting of a writ of certiorari by the High Court itself operates as a super sedas, if the writ of restitution has not been executed. If possession has been obtained by the prosecutor under the writ of restitution, the King's Bench Division will, if justice requires it, grant a writ of re restitution to the defendant (1 Hawk P O, c 28, ss 61—66. Bac Abr Forcible Entry and Detainer, G). The indictment may be removed by certiorari into the High Court, and after the conviction of the defendant an application may be made to that court for the writ of restitution, to which it would appear that the prosecutor is entitled as of right (see R v Williams (1829), 4 Man & Ry (n b) 471). For the purpose of applying for the writ of restitution the indictment should allege not only that the prosecutor was in possession of the land, but also that he was seized of it (R v Hoare (1817), 6 M & S 266).

(1) Stat (1553) 1 Mar sess 2, c 3, s 1. This Act applies to the present services of the Established Church (Preswick v Rooksby (1613), 2 Bulst 47, Moone's Case (1682), T Jo 159). The service must be actually proceeding at the time (Williams v Glenister (1824), 2 B & C 699). To disturb a priest of the Established Church in the performance of divine worship appears to be a misdemeanour at common law (R v Parry (1686), Tremaine's Pleas of the Crown, 239, and see Wilson v Greaves (1757), 1 Burr 240, 243, R v Cheere (1825), 4 B & C 902). By the Act of Uniformity (1 Eliz c 2), s 3, pecuniary penalties are imposed upon persons who by deed or open threatenings compel a minister in any cathedral, parish church, chapel, or other place to sing or say any prayer other than that contained in the Prayer Book, or who by the same means unlawfully interrupt such a minister in singing or saying common prayer. The punishment for a third offence is the forfeiture of all goods and chattels and imprisonment for life.

The assemblies for religious worship allowed by this Act, and which alone were protected, were meetings of Protestants at places duly certified and registered in the manner prescribed (s 2), but Quakers' meetings were not included. By the Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict c 59), s 4, all laws then in force against the disturbing of any meeting of persons assembled for religious worship permitted by any former Acts were applied to all meetings whatsoever of persons lawfully assembled for that purpose. The offence of disturbing a religious service is also known as brawling, and may be prosecuted under the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict c 32), s 2, which provides that any person who is guilty of riotous violent or indecent behaviour in any church or chapel of the Church of England, or in any chapel of any religious denomination, or in any place of worship duly certified under the Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict c 81), whether during the celebration of divine service or at any other time, or in any churchyard or burial ground, or who molests or disturbs any clergyman or minister authorised to minister therein shall be punishable on summary conviction by a fine of £5, or imprisonment, without fine, for two months. The offence can be committed by a clergyman who acts in a violent or indecent way in his own church or churchyard (Vallancey v Fletcher, [1897] 1 Q B 265). It is no defence that the defendant in what he did was only asserting a bonâ fide claim of right (Asher v Calcraft (1887), 18 Q. B. Public

the army.

975 A soldier is amenable to the criminal law to the same extent as any other subject, and is punishable by the ordinary courts having a criminal jurisdiction (g)

Any officer is by statute (h) guilty of a misdemeanour who (1) neglects or refuses on application to deliver over to the civil magistrate any officer or soldier under his command who is accused or convicted of any offence, or (2) wilfully obstructs or neglects or refuses to assist constables or other ministers of justice in apprehending any such officer or soldier

A soldier in a subordinate position is not, it would seem, criminally responsible for the consequences of obeying the orders of his superior officer whose orders he is bound to obey, provided those orders are not having regard to the occasion upon which they are given and executed, manifestly illegal (i)

Any officer is by statute (k) guilty of a misdemeanour who quarters or causes to be billeted any soldier or horse otherwise than as the Army Act, 1881, allows (l)

The punishment for this and for the last-mentioned offence is fine and imprisonment without hard labour (m)

Offences by Post Office

976. Any person employed under the Post Office is by statute (n) guilty of a misdemeanour who contrary to his duty opens, or procures or suffers to be opened, or who wilfully detains or delays or procures or suffers to be detained or delayed, any postal packet in course of transmission by post, or who discloses or intercepts the contents of a telegram

The punishment for such offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour or a fine, or both imprisonment and fine (o)

Any person who has official duties connected with the Post Office, or who is acting on behalf of the Postmaster-General, is by statute (p) guilty of a misdemeanour, if contrary to his duty he discloses or in any way makes known or intercepts the contents or any part of the

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment without hard labour for not more than twelve calendar months (g)

977 Any commissioner or collector or officer or person employed in relation to the Inland Revenue is by statute (r) guilty of a misdemeanour who asks for or receives any sum of money or recompense or any promise thereof, or enters into any collusive agreement to do, abstain from, conceal, or connive at any act whereby the King may be defrauded

The punishment for this offence is a fine of £500, and on conviction the offender becomes incapable of ever holding any office under the Crown (s)

978 Any collector of Inland Revenue is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (t) who neglects to keep and render the prescribed accounts of sums received by him

Any collector or any person appointed to be an officer and employed in relation to duties of excise is by statute (a) guilty of a misdemeanour, if he trades in any goods subject to any such duty or is concerned in any business subject to any law of excise

SECT. 4—Offences relating to the Administration of Justice (b).

SUB-SECT. 1.—Embracery

979 Anyone is at common law guilty of the misdemeanour of embracery who attempts to corrupt, influence, or instruct a jury or to incline them to favour one side more than the other, whether by money, promises, letters, threats, or persuasion, or by any other means than by evidence and arguments in open court at the trial

To give jurors money after their verdict is an act of embracery, though there was no previous promise to pay it

The offence may be committed as well by one of the jury as by a party to the cause or any person acting on his behalf (c)

Every person is at common law guilty of a misdemeanour who by improper means procures himself or others to be sworn upon a jury for the purpose of giving a verdict favourable to one of the parties (d) or induces a juror not to appear (e)

The punishment for this and for the last mentioned offence is fine and imprisonment without hard labour (f)

SUB-SECT 2—Perjury

980 A person is guilty of the common law misdemeanour of perjury (g) who in the course of a judicial proceeding before an authority of competent jurisdiction makes upon oath or affirmation a statement which is material to the matter in question in such proceeding and is false to the knowledge of the person making it or is not known or believed by him to be true (h)

The punishment by statute for wilful and corrupt perjury is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (i)

Children of tender years are under certain circumstances allowed to give evidence without being sworn, but in such a case they are liable to be punished for perjury on summary conviction, if they give false evidence (k)

Judicial

981 The oath must have been taken in a judicial proceeding or inquiry, but not necessarily in a then pending litigation, if it is taken in the usual course with a view to and for the purposes of litigation (a)

Jurisdiction

982 The making of a false statement on oath etc does not amount to perjury unless the oath etc is taken before an authority having competent jurisdiction, i.e., before a person having legal authority to administer it, and in a court having jurisdiction over the matter which is in question in the proceedings in which the oath or affirmation is taken (b)

Commissioners for oaths may administer oaths or take affidavits for the purposes of any court or matter in England, including matters relating to the registration of any instrument, whether under Act of Parliament or otherwise (c), and false oaths taken before them are punishable as perjury (d).

SECT. 4.
Offences relating to the Administration of Justice.

If a false affidavit is sworn abroad before a person authorised by English law to administer an oath (e), and is used in England, the deponent is guilty of perjury (f). If a false affidavit is sworn abroad before a person not so authorised (g), the deponent is not guilty of perjury, but is guilty of a misdemeanour, if he uses such a false document in order to pervert the course of justice (h).

False affidavits.

A person who makes a false promissory oath is not guilty of perjury (i), nor is a juror punishable who gives a verdict contrary to his oath and the manifest evidence (k).

Promissory oath.

983 To support a charge of perjury it is necessary that the evidence alleged to be false should have been material to the issue or matter then under the consideration of the court (l). Evidence False statement must be material.

Simmons (1809), Bell, C C 168 (evidence of defendant on irregular or defective bastardy proceedings in which he had appeared without objecting to irregularity). In the following cases it was held that a false oath did not amount to perjury, not having been taken before an authority with competent jurisdiction—R v Ewington (1841), 2 Mood C C 223 (evidence given in bankruptcy proceedings, there having been no good petitioning creditor's debt to support the fiat), R v Scotton (1844), 5 Q B 493 (evidence given on the hearing of a summons under the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will 4, c 32), there having been no information on oath which was then a condition precedent to the issuing of a summons, the authority of R v Scotton was, however, doubted in R v Hughes (1879), 4 Q B D 614, 628 630, C C R, in which it was held that if a person is rightly or wrongly brought in person before justices and a charge of an offence committed within their jurisdiction is then made against him, they are acting within their jurisdiction, and perjury may be assigned upon false evidence given in the course of such proceedings), R v Bacon (1870), 11 Cox, C C 540 (evidence given on a charge under s 78 of the Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will 4, c 50), of furious riding the justices having under that Act only power to fine for furious driving, see now, however, Williams v. Evans (1876), 1 Ex D 277), R v Clegg (1864), 19 L J 47 (evidence given by the defendant on the hearing of a summons against himself for permitting gambling, the defendant not being then a competent witness on his own behalf and falsely pretending that he was his own son, see now Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), s 1), R v Lloyd (1857), 19 Q B D 213, C C R (where the defendant had been sworn before the registrar as a witness in an examination in bankruptcy, but the registrar was not present in the room at the time when the alleged false evidence was given), R v Cohen (1816), 1 Stark 511 (evidence given at the trial of an action brought by two plaintiffs one of whom died before the trial, whereby the action had abated, the proper suggestion not having been made on the record). is material if it is of such a nature as in any way to affect directly or indirectly the probability of anything to be determined by the proceeding (m) Evidence in any way affecting the credit or credibility of the deponent or of any other witness is material (n) Evidence may be material, although it was legally inadmissible and wrongly admitted (o)

If the false evidence was as to a matter which was only collateral to the issue, and which did not affect the credit of the deponent or another witness, it is not material, and will not support an indictment for perjury (p).

Must be
statement of fact

984. The statement on oath must have been a statement of a fact and not a mere opinion (q) But whether or not the defendant held the opinion which he swore he did hold, is a question of fact upon which an indictment may be founded (r)

If a man wilfully and corruptly swears to a particular fact without knowing at the time whether this fact is true or false, he is guilty of perjury (s)

A false statement does not amount to perjury, unless it was made intentionally with some degree of deliberation, and without inadvertence (t)

In the last-mentioned case the defendant was indicted for perjury committed before justices upon a charge by him against the prosecutor of using language calculated to incite to the commission of a breach of the peace This language was alleged to have been used in consequence of the cruelty of the defendant to a horse, and the assignment of perjury was upon the defendant's oath that he had committed no act of cruelty to the horse, MELLOX, J., after consultation with LUSH, J., held that the defendant's words were merely collateral to the issue before the justices, and he directed an acquittal. In R. v. Dunston (1824), Ry & M 109, it was held by ABBOTT, C J., that the defendant could not be indicted for perjury in his sworn answer in a Chancery suit for specific performance in which he set up the Statute of Frauds as a defence, and also denied the existence of any verbal agreement to the effect alleged in the bill, this allegation being immaterial and irrelevant see also R. v. Benesack (1796), Peake, Add Cas 93, and compare R. v. Yates (1841), Car & M. 132

985. Two or more persons cannot be joined in one indictment for perjury, the offence being in its nature several (u)

An indictment may contain several assignments (c) alleging different acts of perjury, and a conviction upon any one assignment will be good (b).

In an indictment for perjury or for taking a false oath or declaration it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged upon the defendant, and by what court or before whom the oath or declaration etc. was taken, without setting forth the pleading, indictment, or any part of any proceeding, or the commission or authority of the court or person before whom such offence was committed (c).

An indictment for perjury must, however, show that the false oath was taken in a judicial proceeding and before a court of competent jurisdiction (d), but it need not allege in detail facts showing that the court had jurisdiction over the matter in question.

Hailey (1824), 1 O & P 258, and see R v Petricus, supra) If the alleged false statement was in a foreign language, it is sufficient to set forth an English translation in the indictment, alleging that the defendant swore "in substance and to the effect following, that is to say" (R v Thomas (1818), 2 Car & Kir 806). The fact that owing to an informality in the jurat or other technicality the affidavit could not have been used will not prevent an indictment being founded upon it (R v Hailey, supra, Dall v Hamont (1841), 8 M & W 317, per ALDERSON, B, R v Christian (1842), Car & M 388, 393). The offence is complete upon the false oath being taken, and the fact that no use was made of the affidavit and no proceeding founded upon it is immaterial (R v Crossley (1797), 7 Term Rep 315), so also is the fact that the false evidence was rejected as inadmissible or withdrawn (R v Philpotts (1851), 2 Den 302). In R v Carr (1669), 1 Sid 418, it was held by the court upon a trial at bar that upon an indictment for perjury in an answer in Chancery to which exceptions were taken, whereupon a second answer was put in giving explanations, nothing could be assigned as perjury which was explained in the second answer, because the second answer made that which was at first a perjury no perjury. See the observations of Lord ELDON, L O., on this case in Edwards v M'Leay (1813), 2 Ves & B at p 258. In R v Jones (1791), Peake, 17, Lord KENYON, O J., held that in the case of an assignment of perjury upon oral evidence the whole of the defendant's evidence should be proved, for if in one part of his evidence he corrected any mistake he had made in another part of it, it would not be perjury, but in R v Dowlan (1793), Peake, 170, the same judge held that if the alleged false statement was an isolated answer, given in cross examination, and entirely unconnected with the original examination, the latter need not be proved. See also R v Rowley (1825), Ry & M 299, R v Munton (1829), 3 O & P 498.

(u) R v Philips (1731), 2 Stra 921, but it is otherwise in indictments for subornation of perjury (R v Rhodes (1703), 2 Ld Raym 886), and probably an indictment one count of which charges one defendant with perjury and another charges another defendant with subornation is good (1 Russell on Crimes, 412, n. See for such an indictment R v Goodfellow (1842), Car & M 569). The indictment may charge different acts of perjury in separate counts (Castro v R (1881), 6 App Cas 229).

If the alleged perjury is in an affidavit or statutory declaration made before a commissioner to administer oaths, it is not sufficient to allege generally his authority to take an oath, the circumstances under which the oath was taken should be set out in the indictment in order that the court may judge of the authority (e)

The indictment must show, either by an express averment or by a statement of the proceedings or facts of the case, that the question to which the false statement related was material (f).

The indictment must show either explicitly or otherwise what the material question was to which the alleged false statement related (g)

The indictment will be bad, unless it alleges that the defendant swore "falsely" The words "corruptly," "knowingly," or "maliciously" are insufficient to supply the defect (h)

Although in an indictment for the common law offence it is not necessary to allege that the defendant swore "wilfully" (i), an indictment for perjury, in order to satisfy the Perjury Act, 1728 (k), must state that the defendant swore "wilfully and corruptly" (l)

Evidence.

986. To prove each assignment of perjury there must either be (1) the evidence of two witnesses confirming each other in substantial matters, and disproving the defendant's statement alleged to be false (m), or (2) the evidence of one witness confirmed by other independent and corroborative circumstances (n), or (3) evidence that the defendant has himself made a contradictory statement on oath or in writing, and also that such contradictory statement was true and that the statement alleged in the assignment was false (o)

With regard to the form of oath it is sufficient to allege that the defendant was in due manner sworn without stating the form of oath (R v M'Carthy (1792), Peake, 155, per Lord KENYON, C.J.) The various assignments of perjury must be negatived by averments as in an indictment for obtaining property by false pretences (R v Perrott (1814), 2 M. & S. 379, 385). statement on oath was sufficient without further evidence showing which of his two statements was false, but it is submitted that this is not law (see R v Hook (1858), Dears & B 606, where it was said by POLLOCK, C B., at p 614, that probably no judge would now direct a conviction upon such evidence as was deemed sufficient in R v Knoll without confirmatory circumstances, R v Wheatland (1838), 8 C & P 238, R v Jackson (1823), 1 Lew C C 270, R v Hughes (1844), 1 Car & Kir 519). Where one witness proves the falsity of the defendant's statement which is the subject of the indictment, contradictory written statements by the defendant, though not made upon oath, have been held to be a sufficient corroboration (R v Mayhew (1834), 6 O & P 315). It is not necessary to prove by two witnesses every fact which goes to make out an assignment of perjury (R v Roberts (1818), 2 Car & Kir 607, R v Hare (1876), 13 Cox, C C 174).

(p) R v Bird (1891), 17 Cox, C C 387, where the averment was that the defendant had sworn he had seen a certain person at 11 15 a m., but the evidence showed that the defendant had sworn he had seen him at 11 15, but without stating whether it was a m or p m., and DAY J., directed an acquittal. To prove what the defendant swore a witness must be called who heard his evidence given, a magistrate's clerk's notes or those of a shorthand writer may be used by the person who wrote them to refresh his memory in giving evidence, but they are not themselves evidence (R v Newall (1852) 6 Cox, C C 21), nor are the judge's notes (R v Child (1851), 5 Cox, C C 197, 203), what was said by the judge in delivering judgment in the court in which the oath was taken is not evidence (R v Britton (1893) 17 Cox, C C 627), nor is the result of the proceedings in that court (R v Goodfellow (1842), Car & M 569, 574, R v Fonten Moreau (1848) 11 Q B 1028). The judge may apparently be subpoenaed to prove what evidence was given before him (R v Morgan (1852), 6 Cox, C C 107, 108 MARLIN, B.), but that course ought not to be taken (R v Hazard (1838), 8 C & P 595, PATTERSON, J.), and it appears that persons occupying a judicial position, though they are competent witnesses, cannot be compelled to give evidence as to what has taken place before them when acting in that capacity (Ellis v Saltau (1808), 4 C & P 327, n, Ponsford v Swayne (1861), 4 L. T. (N S) 15) and POLLOCK, B., is stated to have refused to give such evidence (2 Taylor, Evidence, 987, n).

(q) As to proceedings in the High Court, see R v Scott (1877), 2 Q B D 415, C C R., where it was held sufficient to produce the filed copies of the writ and pleadings. A sealed copy of the minutes of proceedings in a county court, certified by the registrar, are sufficient proof of such proceedings and of the regularity thereof, and of the due appointment of the judge or deputy judge (County Courts Act, 1848 (51 & 52 Vict c 43), s 28, R v Roberts (1878), 14 Cox, C C 101 C C R.). If the perjury is alleged to have taken place at a criminal trial, the proceedings may be proved by the production of the record by the officer of the court. A certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and trial for any felony or misdemeanour purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court or other officer of the court having custody of the records of the court where the indictment was tried, or his deputy, is upon the trial of any indictment for perjury or subornation of perjury sufficient evidence of the trial of such indictment without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100) s 22). The indictment alone is not sufficient evidence of the proceedings (R v Coles (1887), 16 Cox, C C 165), but production by the officer of the court of the caption, indictment, and minutes from which the record would be drawn up is sufficient (R v Newman (1852), 2 Den 390). If the alleged perjury was committed before justices the information must be proved and also the summons, and notice should be given to the defendant to produce the original Evidence must be given to prove that the alleged false statement was false to the defendant's knowledge. Further evidence may be given to show that the perjury was wilful and corrupt, e.g., by proof of expressions of malice used by the defendant towards the person against whom he gave the false evidence (r).

987. A judge of a superior court, justice or commissioner of assize, magistrus, or gaol delivery, recorder, deputy recorder, chairman, or other judge of quarter sessions, judge or deputy judge of a county court or any court of record, justices of the peace in special or petty sessions, and a sheriff or deputy sheriff before whom any writ of inquiry or similar writ from any of the superior courts is executed, may, in case it shall appear that any person has been guilty of perjury in any evidence given or any affidavit etc or other proceeding before him, direct such person to be prosecuted for such perjury and may commit him for trial (s)

declarations.

988 Declarations have been substituted by various statutes (a) for oaths and affidavits in many cases. In any case where a declaration is so substituted by statute for an oath, or is authorised by statute to be made, any person who wilfully and corruptly makes such a declaration knowing it to be untrue in any material particular is guilty of a misdemeanour (b) summons, if it was served upon him (R v Newall (1852), 6 Cox, C C 21, R v Hurrell (1862), 3 F & F 271, R v Whybrow (1861), 8 Cox, C C 438, R v Dillon (1877), 14 Cox, C C 4), but if the defendant appeared before the justices, proof of the summons is not necessary (R v Shaw (1865), L & Ca 579, 588, 592, R v Smith (1867), L R 1 C C R 110). To prove the jurisdiction of the justices upon a charge under the Licensing Act with reference to licensed premises the licence must be put in evidence (R v Lewis (1872), 12 Cox, C C 163, R v Evans (1890), 17 Cox, C C 37). That a commissioner to administer oaths has acted as such is prima facie evidence of his authority to take the oath without proof of his commission (R v Howard (1832), 1 Mood & R 187, R v Newton (1811), 1 Car & Kir 469, 480). The commissioner need not be called as a witness, if the jurat of the affidavit states that the affidavit was taken before him by the defendant, and if his handwriting and that of the defendant are proved (R v Morris (1761), 2 Burr 1189, R v Spruier (1824), 1 C & P 260).

The Act applies (s 1 (2)) to affidavits and declarations made for the purposes of any court or matter in England including matters ecclesiastical or relating to applications for notarial faculties or the registration of any instrument whether under an Act of Parliament or otherwise. These offences are not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1).

PART X.—OFFENCES AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

The punishment for such an offence, where there is no other expressly mentioned, is fine and imprisonment without hard labour (c).

SECT. 4.
Offences relating to the Administration of Justice.

989 It is declared by statute (d) to be unlawful, and is therefore a misdemeanour punishable with fine and imprisonment without hard labour, for a justice of the peace or other person to administer, or cause to be administered, any oath, affidavit, or solemn affirmation touching any matter whereof such justice or other person had no jurisdiction or cognisance by some statute then in force.

False oath in a proceeding not judicial.

Although a false oath taken before anyone who has authority to administer an oath, but not taken in a judicial proceeding, does not properly speaking constitute perjury, the taking of such a false oath is a misdemeanour at common law, if it be done with an illegal or improper object and in a matter of public concern (c), and upon an indictment for perjury the defendant may be convicted of such misdemeanour, if the indictment states facts sufficient to constitute the offence of taking a false oath (f).

The punishment for taking such a false oath is imprisonment without hard labour and fine.

SECT. 3.—Subornation of Perjury.

990 Everyone is guilty of the common law misdemeanour of subornation of perjury who procures another person to take a false oath amounting to perjury.

Subornation
of perjury.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (g).

(c) The punishment for delivering a declaration in which the particulars required by the Revenue Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 14), are not fully and truly stated is a penalty of £20 (ibid., s. 25), under the Customs Consolidation Act, 1878 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36) the penalty is £100 (ibid., s. 108), under the Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), the punishment is imprisonment without hard labour for not more than six months and a penalty of twice the amount of the duty for which the offender has been charged (ibid., s. 66).

(d) Statutory Declarations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 62), s. 13. There is an exception in favour of oaths required by the laws of foreign countries to give validity to instruments in writing to be used in such countries, as to the indictment in such a case, see R. v. Nott (1841), 4 Q. B. 768. As to unlawful oaths, see p. 465, ante.

(e) The following are instances —R. v. Chapman (1849), 1 Den. 432 (false oath before a surrogate to obtain a marriage licence), Re Rushton, Ex parte Overton (1815), 2 Rose, 257 (affidavit in support of petition to stay a certificate in bankruptcy), R. v. Hodgkiss (1869), L. R. 1 Q. B. 212 (affidavit for the purpose of getting a bill of sale filed). The making of a false affidavit for this purpose is now made perjury by the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 17. See title BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III, p. 48.

The offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38), s. 1). If a solicitor who has been convicted of perjury, subornation of perjury, forgery, or common barratry, afterwards acts as solicitor or agent in any action, the judge of the court in which the action is brought may inquire into the matter in a summary way and sentence him to penal servitude for seven years (Frivolous Arrests Act, 1725 (12 Geo. 1, c. 29), s. 4, made perpetual by the since repealed stat. (1747) 21 Geo. 2, c. 3).

To attempt or conspire to persuade or incite a person to give false evidence, although not amounting to subornation of perjury unless the perjury is actually committed, is a misdemeanour at common law punishable by fine and imprisonment (a).

Attempting, by the manufacture of false evidence, to mislead a judicial tribunal and to pervert the course of justice is a common law misdemeanour, whether or not the tribunal is misled and even if it does not in fact sit (b)

Indictment

991. In an indictment for subornation of perjury or for corrupt bargaining or contracting with any person to commit perjury, or for inciting, causing, or procuring any person unlawfully, wilfully, falsely, fraudulently, deceitfully, maliciously, or corruptly to take or subscribe any oath, affirmation, declaration, affidavit, deposition, notice, certificate, or other writing, it is sufficient, wherever such perjury or other offence has been committed, to allege the offence of the person who actually committed it in the same manner as in an indictment for perjury (c), and then to allege that the defendant unlawfully, wilfully, and corruptly caused and procured such person to do and commit the said offence in manner and form aforesaid. Where such perjury or other offence has not been committed, it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged upon the defendant without averring any of the matters unnecessary to be averred in the case of perjury (d)

992 It is a common law misdemeanour, with the object of defeating the course of justice, to dissuade, intimidate, or prevent, or try to dissuade, intimidate, or prevent, a person who is bound to give evidence in a criminal matter from doing so (e)

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour and fine (f)

SUB-SECT. 5.—Barratry and Maintenance and Champerty

994 A barrator is a common mover and exciter, or maintainer, of suits and quarrels either in the courts themselves or in the country, as by a disturbance of the peace, or where the right to the possession of land is in controversy in taking or keeping possession by force, subtlety, or deceit, or by making false inventions and sowing calumnies, rumours, and reports whereby discord and disquiet may grow between neighbours (k)

The case may be heard and determined by a court of summary jurisdiction, unless the prosecutor or the defendant wishes it to be sent for trial (s 3). This offence is triable at quarter sessions, except, it seems in the metropolitan area (ibid).

(i) Ibid, s 2. The offender may also be ordered to pay compensation to the person injured (s 4).

(k) Co Litt 368 a. No one can be a barrator in respect of one act only. The indictment must charge the defendant with being a common barrator (1 Hawk P C, c 27, s 5), particulars of the specific instances intended to be proved must be given to the defendant (ibid, s 13), and the prosecution will not be allowed to give evidence of any other instances than those specified in the particulars (L'Anson v Stuart (1787), 1 Term Rep 748, 754). With the exception of R v Bellgrave (Guildford Assizes, 1889, referred to in Archbold, Criminal Pleading, p 1079) it is believed that there has not been a prosecution for barratry for many years. Barratry is also used in another sense to mean a fraud committed by the master or seamen of a ship (see Earle v Rowcroft (1806), 8 East, 126, and title INSURANCE). Barratry of this kind is a crime (Todd v Ritchie (1816), 1 Stark 240), but is not indictable eo nomine, but under the name of some such offence as larceny, fraud, malicious injury, or piracy.

(l) 1 Hawk P C, c 27, s 14. A person who, after being convicted of barratry, practises as a solicitor in the High Court, may be punished as aforesaid by that court and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for two years (Privileged Arrests Act 1725 (12 Geo 1, c 29), s 4, made perpetual by stat (1747) 21 Geo 2, c 30). Quare, whether barratry is triable at quarter sessions.

It is lawful for persons to combine together to prosecute a guilty person or one against whom there are reasonable grounds of suspicion (q); but, in cases in which the maintenance of civil suits is illegal (r), combinations to maintain such suits are punishable, whether they are well founded or not, every conspiracy to commit an illegal act being an indictable misdemeanour (s).

SUB-SECT 6—Conspiracy to obstruct the Course of Justice

996 It is a misdemeanour at common law for two or more persons to conspire together (t) to obstruct, defeat, pervert or prevent the course of public justice (u), either by bringing a false criminal charge against a man (a) or by preventing a witness from giving evidence in a criminal prosecution or agreeing with him that he should not attend at the trial for that purpose (b), or by publishing matter calculated to interfere with the course of justice or to pervert the minds of the court or of the jurors (c), or by producing in court evidence known to be false (d).

The punishment for the offence is fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (e).

It is no defence to a charge of conspiracy to accuse of a crime that the indictment or other proceedings preferred or intended to be preferred were insufficient, or that the court had no jurisdiction, or that the charge was not a grave one (f).

HOLL, C J, appears to have thought that a more insolent expression used to a judge in court was not indictable (R v Rogers (1702), 7 Mod Rep 28, and see R v Nun (1811), 10 Mod Rep 186), and that the proper punishment was to proceed summarily for contempt. But see 2 Hawk P C, c 22, s 35. In the case of a contempt of a court not of record, the only remedy is to order the removal of the offender or to proceed by indictment or information. The court itself has no power to commit, and the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice has no summary power in such a case (Ex parte Hyndman (1886), 2 T L R 351). In the case of disobedience of an order by a ministerial officer the proper remedy is by indictment, or by attachment if the court has power to attach (n)

999 A person cannot be found guilty of disobedience to the order of a court, if the order was made in a matter in which the court making it had no jurisdiction (o), but if there was jurisdiction to make the order, the question whether it was rightly made on the merits will not be considered (p)

The defendant may give in evidence by way of excuse that he has done everything in his power to obey the order (q)

Personal service of the whole order, or a copy, must have been made on the defendant (r).

1000 An indictment or information will not lie for insulting words spoken to or of a magistrate when he is not sitting as such, unless the tendency of the words is to provoke a breach of the peace (s), but scandalising a judge by personal scurrilous abuse of him as a judge, or any act done or writing published which is calculated to bring a court into contempt or to lower the authority of the judge of the court, is contempt of court, and is punishable by indictment or information as well as by the summary process of committal (t)

See p 232 ante

(n) An indictment or attachment is the proper proceeding, and a mandamus will not be granted when a public officer has received an order from his masters or any competent authority and disobeys it, when there is no such order and an act is required to be done, a mandamus will be granted, and when there is such an order and the ministerial officer is only put forward as the nominal party and there are other persons who are really to be acted on by the mandamus, the mandamus will be granted (R v Bristow (1795) 6 Term Rep 168, R v Surrey (County Treasurer) (1819), 1 Chit 650, R v Wood Dutton (Highway Surveyors) (1849), 18 L J (M C) 218, see also R v Payn (1837), 6 Ad & El 392, 401, R v Oswestry (Treasurer) (1848) 12 Q B 239)

SECT. 5—Offences relating to Arrest, the Prosecution and Punishment of Criminals, and the Execution of Civil Process.

SUB-SECT 1—Misprision

1001 Misprision of treason is a common law misdemeanour, and consists in the bare knowledge and concealment of high treason without any degree of assent thereto (u)

A mere general knowledge that a rebellion is intended without any knowledge of the persons engaged or of particulars of the design is not sufficient to constitute the offence (x)

A person knowing that treason is plotted or committed is bound to reveal it as soon as he can to a judge of assize or a justice of the peace (y)

Two witnesses are necessary for a conviction, as in treason (a)

The punishment for misprision of treason is imprisonment for life, with forfeiture of goods and of the profits of lands for life (b)

1002 Misprision of felony is a common law misdemeanour, and consists of the concealing of a felony by a person who knows of but does not consent to it

This offence is punishable by fine and imprisonment without hard labour (c) In the case of an officer, as a sheriff or bailiff, the term of imprisonment is fixed at one year, as well as a ransom at the King's pleasure (d)

SUB SECT 2—Compounding Offences

1003 It is a misdemeanour at common law (e) to compound a felony, i.e., to agree in consideration of the return of goods stolen or of any other advantage not to prosecute a person who has committed a felony

The punishment for the offence is fine and imprisonment without hard labour (f)

It is no offence to abstain from prosecuting (g), or simply to promise not to prosecute, or to take back goods which have been

(c) 1 Hale, P C 374 The offence is triable at quarter sessions As to infants, see note (g) on p 240, ante

(d) Ibid There has been no prosecution for this offence for many years The expression "misprision of felony" has "somewhat passed into disuse" (Williams v Bayley (1866), L R. 1 H L 200, at p 220, per Lord WESBURY, but the fact that mere concealment of a felony without any participation in it is still a criminal offence may affect the validity of a transaction based on such concealment (see Williams v Bayley (1866), L R. 1 H L 200, 220, stolen, unless they are returned in consideration of a promise to favour the thief either by not prosecuting him or otherwise (h)

It is the agreement not to prosecute which constitutes the offence, and it is immaterial whether there is or is not a subsequent failure to prosecute (i). A person may be convicted of the offence of compounding a larceny although he is not the owner of the stolen goods (j).

An agreement to compound a misdemeanour of a public nature, even if made with the consent of the judge at the trial, is unlawful in the sense that such an agreement can give rise to no civil right and no action can be brought upon it (k), in some cases, when the object of the agreement is to obstruct or prevent the course of justice, the persons who enter into such an agreement are, it seems, guilty of a common law misdemeanour (l)

1004 It is by statute (m) a misdemeanour for a common informer or plaintiff in an action on a penal statute to compound or agree with a person alleged to have offended against such statute, until the defendant has made his answer in court, and such compounding is then only lawful with the consent of the court

The offence may be committed, even although proceedings for a penalty have not been commenced (n), and even if there has been no offence against the penal statute, if money is taken to prevent threatened proceedings under the statute (o)

The offence is not committed, if the infringement of the penal statute is only cognisable by magistrates (p).

The punishment for this offence is fine or imprisonment without hard labour or both, and the offender is upon conviction disqualified from thereafter suing upon any penal statute (q)

Many felonies are not so enormous offences as perjury, and therefore to stifle a prosecution for perjury seems to be a greater offence than compounding some felonies." The reward is "corruptly" taken if it is received dishonestly, under false pretences, and with a false and sinister design, and with no intention to detect or discover the thief (s). It is unnecessary to show that the reward was paid before the property was restored, if it was so paid in pursuance of a previous agreement to that effect (t).

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, if the offender is a male under eighteen years, whipping may be also ordered (u).

To warn a person with a view to prevent him from committing an offence is not an obstructing of a police officer who is seeking to obtain evidence upon which to prosecute him (c) It is doubtful whether the obstruction to be punishable need be either a physical act or a threat (d).

A person resisting a peace officer cannot be convicted of this offence, unless the officer was acting strictly within the limits of his powers and legal duty (e) Although a person is entitled to resist an arrest which a constable is not authorised to make, he is guilty of an assault if he uses more violence than is reasonably necessary for the purpose (f) It is not necessary to show that the defendant knew that the person arresting him was a police constable (g)

SUB-SECT 5 — Offences relating to Prisons etc

(1.) Prison Breach

1009 A person is guilty of the common law offence of breach of prison who, while lawfully in the custody of the law for any cause whatever, whether criminal or civil, and whether he is actually within the walls of a prison or in the custody of any person who has lawfully arrested him, escapes from that custody by the use of any force (l). If the prisoner is under detention upon a charge of treason or felony, whether he has been convicted or not, the breach of prison is a felony, the punishment is then penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (m), if the detention is upon a lesser charge, breach of prison is a misdemeanour (n), the punishment in that case is fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (o).

A prisoner may be convicted of breach of prison, although he has not been tried for the offence in respect of which he was committed (p), but if he is first tried on indictment for the latter offence and acquitted, it seems that he cannot afterwards be convicted of the breach of prison (q).

(i) R v Brown (1841), Car & M 314, R v Sherlock (1866), 1, R 1 C O R. 20 There appears to be no modern authority that there is a legal duty to afford physical assistance to the police to arrest in cases other than those involving a then existing or threatened breach of the peace, and in the older text-books the obligation seems to be confined to the case of affrays. See Dalton, Country Justice (ed 1705), c 8, p 35, and Ritson on "The Office of Constable" (1815) at p 40.

(m) Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 8, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1, (1295), 23 Edw 1, statute de frangentibus prisonam.

(n) 2 Hawk P C, c 18, ss. 1, 8, 15, 16. It has been doubted whether there can be a conviction for breach of prison, if the committal is for a felony which has not in fact been committed by anyone (ibid s 15, 1 Hale, P C 610, but see R v Waters (1873), 12 Cox, C C 390). It is submitted that this can only depend upon whether the prisoner was at the time in lawful custody or not. If, for instance, he were arrested by a private person upon suspicion of a felony which had not been committed, he could not be convicted of breach of prison, if he freed himself from the custody of that person.

(o) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c 100), s 29. Breach of prison is triable at quarter sessions.

(p) 2 Co Inst. 592.

(q) 1 Hale, P C 611. Where a prisoner upon a charge of felony made his escape while under remand before the magistrates, and was afterwards recaptured and the original charge then dismissed, it was held that he might nevertheless be indicted for the breach of prison, the dismissal by the justices not being equivalent to an acquittal on an indictment (R v Waters (1873), 12 Cox, C. C (MARTIN, B) 390).

SECT. 5
Offences
relating to Arrest,
Prosecution
etc.

No breach of prison amounts to felony, unless the prisoner actually escapes<sup>(r)</sup>. There must be an actual breaking and the use of some real force or violence, but the offence is committed even though the breaking may have been done accidentally in the course of the escape<sup>(s)</sup>.

If a prisoner breaks out of prison to save his life, as in the case of fire, he is not guilty of breach of prison, but it is otherwise if he himself has fired the prison<sup>(t)</sup>.

Vagrants.

1010 By statute<sup>(u)</sup> a person breaking or escaping out of any place of legal confinement before the expiration of the term for which he is committed by virtue of the Vagrancy Act, 1825<sup>(v)</sup>, is to be deemed an incorrigible rogue and liable as such to be committed to prison until the next quarter sessions. At quarter sessions he may be ordered to be imprisoned with or without hard labour for not more than a year and to be whipped<sup>(a)</sup>.

(11.) Escape

Escape.

1011 At common law every person is guilty of an escape<sup>(b)</sup> who, (1) being a prisoner, without force, escapes from custody or prison<sup>(c)</sup>, (2) being an officer, intentionally or negligently allows a prisoner to escape from his custody, (3) being a private person, and having a person in his lawful custody, permits him to escape. In all these cases it is immaterial whether the escape is before or after conviction, or whether the prisoner was guilty or not, or whether he was at the time of the escape actually in prison or on his way there or detained for the purpose of being sent there.

By prisoner

If a prisoner escapes from any lawful custody, without force but by artifice or similar means, he commits a common law misdemeanour punishable by fine and imprisonment<sup>(d)</sup>.

By officer.

1012 To render an officer guilty of an escape, there must first have been an actual and lawful arrest. If the arrest was of such a

An attempt to break prison is punishable by an addition of not more than twelve months' imprisonment to the sentence which the offender is undergoing (Parkhurst Prison Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict c 82), s 12) As to escape from Pentonville Prison, see Pentonville Prison Act 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 29), s. 24 nature that the prisoner would have been justified in escaping, the officer is equally justified in releasing him (e)

An escape of which an officer is guilty may be either voluntary or negligent. An officer who is guilty of a voluntary escape is punishable in the same way as the escaped prisoner who was in custody (f), and forfeits his office (g)

If a person under detention for felony is guilty of the felony for which he is detained, the officer voluntarily permitting him to go is an accessory after the fact to that offence (h).

An officer who negligently allows his prisoner to escape is liable to be fined (i). A head gaoler may be fined, when an escape has taken place by the negligence or even by the voluntary action of his subordinate (k). If a prisoner escapes from gaol or from an officer, the presumption is that the gaoler or officer was negligent, as he should have seen that the gaol was secure, or have taken a sufficient force to convey the person arrested to prison, but it is open to him to rebut this presumption (l).

A gaoler or other officer is entitled to recapture a prisoner who has escaped by his negligence, and if he does so upon fresh pursuit and without losing sight of him, the officer cannot be convicted of an escape, as the law will assume that the prisoner still remained in his custody (m).

1013 A private person who has lawfully arrested another (n) is not only entitled, but bound, to hand him over to a person who by law ought to have the custody of him. If instead of doing so he either voluntarily or negligently permits the person so arrested to escape, he is liable to the same extent and punishable in the same way as an officer. The liability of the private person ceases upon the delivery of the prisoner to a proper officer (o).

It is a common law misdemeanour to aid a person to escape from lawful custody on civil process (p).

(iii) Rescue.

1018. Rescue, or rescous, is the offence of a person who forcibly frees another from a lawful arrest, whether such arrest be by a constable or a private person, or whether the person rescued is in prison or not. It differs in its nature and incidents from breach of prison in that the latter is committed by the prisoner himself and a rescue is by another person.

By the common law if the person rescued is guilty of high treason, and to the knowledge of the rescuer was committed for that crime, the latter is guilty of high treason (g). If the offence for which the person rescued is in custody is a felony or a misdemeanour, the rescuer is guilty of a felony or a misdemeanour respectively (h).

If the person rescued is in the custody of a private person, the rescuer is only guilty, if he knew that the person rescued was in custody for a criminal offence, but if he is in the custody of an officer or constable, it is otherwise, as he then rescues at his peril (i).

If the person arrested is entitled to free himself from an unlawful or irregular arrest, a person rescuing him is not guilty of any offence (k).

The person rescued must be tried for his offence before the rescuer is tried for the rescue, if the former is acquitted, the rescuer cannot under any circumstances be convicted of felony, but he may be fined and imprisoned for a misdemeanour (l). If the person rescued is convicted of felony, and the offence of the rescuer is therefore felony, the rescuer is liable to penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (m). If the rescue is committed under such circumstances as to amount to misdemeanour only, the punishment is fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (n).
